Request for Leave to File Motion to Address Order of Disqualification

The undersigned counsel move for leave to appear on behalf of Hon. Shira A. Scheindlin (hereafter “the District Judge”) in order to address so much of the order of the Motion Panel herein, dated October 31, 2013, as directed the removal of the District Judge as presiding judge in David Floyd et al. v. City of New York

(13-3088), and Jaenean Ligon, et al. v. City of New York et al. (13-3123)

(corrected), and found that the District Judge “ran afoul” of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. A copy of the Motion Panel’s ruling is annexed hereto as Exhibit 1.

This motion is brought pursuant to Rules 21(b)(4), 27, and 29 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure; 28 U.S.C. § 2106; 28 U.S.C. § 1651 (the All Writs Act); and the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Counsel seek leave in the nature of an order under Rule 21(b)(4) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure governing mandamus proceedings providing for appellate review of motions for judicial disqualification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455, authorizing counsel to appear on behalf of the District Judge in order to address the factual and legal sufficiency of the Motion Panel’s sua sponte order of removal.

The undersigned are prepared to appear as counsel for Judge Scheindlin, or as amici curiae on her behalf, in accordance with the wishes of the court.

In support of the motion, counsel state:

1. The District Judge has served with distinction as a trial judge in the Southern District of New York since November, 1994.
2. From March 18, 2013 to May 20, 2013, the District Judge presided over an extensive trial in David Floyd, et al. v. City of New York (13-3088),

- challenging the constitutionality of certain “stop and frisk” practices engaged in by the New York City Police Department (“NYPD”) that were alleged to violate the Fourth Amendment’s prohibition on unreasonable searches and seizures and the Fourteenth Amendment’s guaranty of equal protection of the laws.
3. From October 15, 2012 to November 7, 2012, the District Judge presided over a hearing on a motion for preliminary injunction in Jaenean Ligon, et al. v. City of New York, et al. (13-3123) (corrected), seeking injunctive relief against allegedly unlawful “stop and frisk” practices engaged in by the NYPD.
 4. At no point during the extensive trial in Floyd, the hearing on injunctive relief in Ligon, or during the proceedings that preceded the hearings in either case, did any party seek the disqualification of the District Judge, by recusal or otherwise, or claim that she had violated any Canon of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges; nor did any party raise an objection under Local Rule 13 Governing the Distribution of Business Among District Judges. A copy of Local Rule 13 is annexed hereto as Exhibit 2.
 5. On August 12, 2013, the District Judge issued a lengthy and detailed opinion holding that the “stop and frisk” practices before the Court

- violated the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.
6. On August 12, 2013, the District Judge issued an order concerning remedies in connection with the NYPD's unconstitutional "stop and frisk" practices.
 7. New York City filed an appeal from the District Court's orders on August 16, 2013. On August 27, 2013, New York City moved in the District Court for a stay by letter motion, which was denied by the District Court on September 17, 2013.
 8. At no point during the post-trial motion for a stay in the District Court did any party seek the disqualification of the District Judge on any grounds, or allege that she had "run afoul" of any Canon of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges.
 9. On October 29, 2013, New York City's application for a stay was argued before a motion panel of this Court, consisting of Hon. John M. Walker, Jr., Hon. José Cabranes, and Hon. Barrington D. Parker, Jr. (hereafter "the Motion Panel").
 10. At no point during the oral argument before the Motion Panel did any party seek the disqualification of the District Judge, or allege that she had "run afoul" of a Canon of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges.

When one member of the Motion Panel (Judge Cabranes) sua sponte raised the District Court's colloquy with counsel concerning Local Rule 13, and her interviews with the press, neither party responded with a suggestion of disqualification, or an allegation that the Canons of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges had been breached.

11. On October 31, 2013, the Motion Panel issued an order staying enforcement of the District Court's August 12, 2013 orders pending resolution of New York City's appeal on the merits. The Motion Panel directed, in the name of judicial efficiency, that the appeal be heard by the same three judges who constituted the Motion Panel, rather than by random assignment. See Exhibit 1.
12. In addition to the grant of a stay, the Motion Panel issued a sua sponte order directing the removal of the District Judge, purporting, without affording the District Judge notice or an opportunity to defend herself, to find that the District Judge had "run afoul" of Canons 2 and 3(C)(1) of Code of Conduct for United States Judges. A copy of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges is annexed hereto as Exhibit 3.
13. With respect, the undersigned counsel believe that the Motion Panel's sua sponte order of removal raises troubling issues warranting reconsideration by the Motion Panel, or in the alternative, en banc review by the full Circuit, on both substantive and procedural grounds.

A.

The Motion Panel's Sua Sponte Order Was Procedurally Deficient

14. The Motion Panel's sua sponte order directing removal of the District Judge for "running afoul" of Canons 2 and 3(C)(1) of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges is the functional equivalent of a judicial finding that the District Judge behaved improperly.
15. Unlike United States v. The City of New York, No. 11-5113-cv (May 14, 2013), where the Circuit panel praised the District Judge, but remanded a portion of the case to a new judge to hold a bench trial because the trial judge's earlier negative characterization of the evidence might raise an appearance of a lack of neutrality, the Motion Panel's order of removal in this case rested on allegations of judicial misbehavior.
16. Rule 21 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure carefully assures that where a district judge is charged with conduct amounting to judicial misbehavior, the judge will receive notice of the allegations pending before a Circuit court, and an opportunity to seek leave to be heard.
17. In the vast bulk of cases, requests for the disqualification of a District Judge are raised by a motion to disqualify in the trial court pursuant to 28

U.S.C. §§ 455(a) and (b). Because denial of such a motion is not a final order, appellate review of an order denying a motion to disqualify is available in every Circuit pursuant to Rule 21 F.R.App. Proc., and 28 U.S.C § 1651 (the All Writs Act). See Hearings on Examining the State of Judicial Recusal after Caperton v. A.T. Massey: Hearings before the Subcommittee on Courts and Competition Policy of the H. Comm. on the Judiciary, 111 Cong. (2009).

18. In connection with such a Rule 21 proceeding, Rule 21(b)(4) authorizes a district judge to request permission from the Court of Appeals to address the allegations contained in the mandamus petition; or, in the alternative, to request the Circuit to invite an amicus curiae to address legal and factual issues posed by the application for a writ of mandamus.
19. Counsel understand that the practice in this Circuit is to grant a district judge's request to be heard, either in person or through amicus curiae, prior to issuing an order: (a) removing the judge for alleged misbehavior casting aspersions on the District Judge's judicial integrity; or (b) issuing a writ of a mandamus directing the district judge to engage in other remedial conduct. See In re German and Austrian Banking Litigation, 250 F.3d 156 (2d Cir. 2001) (authorizing the appointment of counsel to represent Judge Shirley Kram in a Rule 21 mandamus proceeding);

- Securities & Exchange Commission v. Citigroup Global Markets*, 11-5375 (authorizing the appointment of counsel to represent Judge Jed Rakoff in mandamus proceeding involving actions pending before Judge Rakoff pursuant to the related case doctrine).
20. In this case, the Motion Panel circumvented the formal protections of Rule 21 by acting sua sponte in the absence of a request for disqualification from any of the parties. This is particularly noteworthy in light of the parties' failure to request disqualification even after Judge Cabranes' expressions of concern during oral argument.
21. Where, as here, a Circuit panel engages in sua sponte action removing a District Judge for alleged improper behavior "running afoul" of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges, the need for notice to the District Judge and an opportunity to be heard is even greater than in the ordinary Rule 21 setting. Under Rule 21, the judge will ordinarily be on notice of the charges against her. Indeed, she will have ordinarily denied a motion for disqualification.
22. Even in such a setting, Rule 21 contemplates notice to the judge and an opportunity to defend herself in the Circuit court.
23. In this case, given the sua sponte nature of the order of removal, and the failure of any party to have sought disqualification, or asserted an alleged violation of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges, during the more than five years that the Floyd case was before the District Court, the District Judge was completely blind-sided by the Motion Panel's sua sponte order finding that her behavior had "run afoul" of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges.

24. In addition to Rule 21(b)(4), in analogous settings, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure require notice and an opportunity to be heard before a court takes adverse action. See Rule 38 F. R. App. Proc. (providing for notice and an opportunity to be heard before the imposition of appellate sanctions on a party).

25. With respect, the Motion Panel's failure to have provided the District Judge with notice and an opportunity to defend herself was not merely a breach of the norms of collegiality and mutual respect that should characterize interactions between District and Circuit judges, it is an affront to the values underlying the Fifth Amendment's guaranty of procedural due process of law.

B.

The Motion Panel's Sua Sponte Order Summarily Removing the District Judge Was Inaccurate and Substantively Unwarranted

26. The failure to accord the District Judge notice and an opportunity to be heard resulted in a sua sponte order of removal premised on inaccurate and incorrect assumptions concerning the behavior of the District Judge.
27. The Motion Panel found that the District Judge's colloquy with plaintiffs' counsel in Daniels v. City of New York, No. 99 Civ. 1695 (S.D.N.Y. filed March 8, 1999) concerning "the related case doctrine" constituted an "improper application of the related case rule" rising to the level of a violation of Canons 2 and 3(C)(1) of the Code of Conduct of United States Judges, and warranted her summary removal. See Exhibit 1.
28. Unfortunately, the Motion Panel's inaccurate characterization of the colloquy, as misreported in a newspaper article cited by the Motion Panel, provides a misleading impression of the District Court's behavior.
29. The Motion Panel did not attach the text of the colloquy to its order. A copy of the full colloquy is annexed hereto as Exhibit 4.
30. A fair reading of the actual colloquy could not lead a reasonable person in possession of all the facts to infer bias or lack of neutrality on the part - of the District Judge. See United States v. Jacobs, 955 F.2d 7, 10 (2d Cir. 1992); United States v. Robin, 553 F.2d 8, 10 (2d Cir. 1977) (en banc).

31. As a review of the text of the 42 page colloquy demonstrates, the discussion of Local Rule 13 dealing with the related case doctrine was in response to efforts by plaintiffs' counsel in Daniels to raise newly discovered evidence concerning the allegedly racially discriminatory nature of the NYPD's "stop and frisk" practices.
32. The District Judge firmly rebuffed efforts to interpret the settlement agreement in Daniels broadly to permit consideration of newly discovered evidence concerning racially discriminatory "stop and frisk" practices, noting that pursuing such a course would result in a waste of the court's time and the parties' resources because the Daniels case had been settled in a manner that made it inappropriate to consider the newly discovered evidence.
33. Instead, the District Court brought Local Rule 13 to the attention of counsel as an alternative that would achieve the desired result without wasting judicial resources. The District Judge's observation that she would accept a new case that would enable consideration of the newly-discovered evidence applied clearly established principles designed to achieve judicial economy.

34. Such a colloquy concerning a judicially efficient means of dealing with newly discovered evidence is indistinguishable from suggestions routinely made by district judges that pleadings be amended in order to permit the efficient consideration of additional issues relevant to the underlying dispute.
35. On remand after the Motion Panel's order of removal, counsel understand that both the Floyd and Ligon cases were assigned to the same trial judge precisely because they clearly fall under Local Rule 13 as related cases.
36. The District Court's recognition that judicial economy would be served by the invocation of the related case doctrine codified in Local Rule 13 is analogous to the decision of the Motion Panel to issue an order retaining jurisdiction over the appeal herein in the name of judicial economy.
37. The Motion Panel alleged, as well, that the District Judge had granted three press interviews in a manner that called her neutrality into question.
38. Once again, the Motion Panel failed to attach transcripts of the press interviews to its ruling. A fair reading of the text of the three interviews, annexed hereto as Exhibits 5, 6, and 7, reveals that no reasonable person could infer bias from the District Judge's responses.

39. In each of the three instances of press questioning, the District Judge explicitly refused to comment on legal issues raised in the pending litigation, and confined her responses to general discussions of constitutional law and explanations of the judicial process.
40. In one interview, the District Judge refuted an allegation circulated in the press by unknown persons that she had granted a disproportionate number of motions to suppress in criminal cases. See Exhibit 7.
41. The District Judge pointed out the methodological inadequacy of the so-called study by noting that it dealt only with written opinions, ignoring the massive number of oral denials of suppression motions that she had issued from the bench.
42. Counsel understand that the Corporation Counsel of the City of New York appeared personally in the District Judge's chambers to apologize for the misleading assertion, and to disclaim responsibility for it.
43. Discussion of important legal issues by members of the judiciary enriches the dialogue that is crucial to public understanding of the rule of law, and is consistent with the values underlying the First Amendment.
44. Given our First Amendment tradition, the general discussion of legal issues engaged in by the District Judge in the press interviews cited by the Motion Panel cannot be deemed to "run afoul" of any Canon of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges, and cannot justify a sua sponte order removing her as a Judge in these proceedings.

45. Until the Motion Panel's sua sponte order directing removal, no party had questioned the District Court's conduct, had sought disqualification, or had alleged a violation of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges.

46. While sua sponte removal by an appellate court may be appropriate in a genuinely egregious case where the parties are unable to raise the issues freely, there is no basis for sua sponte appellate action in a setting where powerful litigants have declined to seek disqualification, even after the judicial conduct in question was critically described by a member of the Motion Panel during oral argument.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned counsel request leave to appear either as counsel to the District Judge, or as amici curiae on her behalf, in order to address the legal and factual issues raised by the Motion Panel's sua sponte order directing her removal in David Floyd, et al. v. City of New York, and Jaenean Ligon et al. v. City of New York, et al.

If the court deems it appropriate on the existing record, including this motion, counsel move, as well, that the order directing disqualification of the District Judge be vacated; or, in the alternative, be reviewed en banc by the judges of the Circuit.

Pending before the Court is a motion filed by Appellants City of New York et al. seeking a stay of the District Court's August 12, 2013 remedial order and preliminary injunction ("Remedies Opinion").

It is hereby ORDERED that the District Court's January 8, 2013 "Opinion and Order," as well as the August 12, 2013 "Liability Opinion" and "Remedies Opinion," each of which may or will have the effect of causing actions to be taken by defendants or designees of the District Court, or causing restraints against actions that otherwise would be taken by defendants, are STAYED pending the disposition of these appeals.

The appeal by defendants in both (consolidated) actions shall continue in the normal course, under the following schedule:

Defendants shall perfect their appeals by January 24, 2014.

Plaintiffs shall file by February 28, 2014.

Defendants shall reply by March 14, 2014.

Oral argument shall be heard on a date after March 14, 2014, to be set by the Court in due course.

The cause is REMANDED to the District Court for the sole purpose of implementation of this Order, and the mandate shall otherwise remain with this Court until the completion of the appeals process.

Upon review of the record in these cases, we conclude that the District Judge ran afoul of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges, Canon 2 ("A judge should avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all activities."); see also Canon 3(C)(1) ("A judge shall disqualify himself or herself in a proceeding in which the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned . . ."), and that the appearance of impartiality surrounding this litigation was compromised by the District Judge's improper application of the Court's "related case rule," see Transfer of Related Cases, S.D.N.Y. & E.D.N.Y. Local Rule 13(a),¹ and by a series of media

interviews and public statements purporting to respond publicly to criticism of the District Court.²

Accordingly, we conclude that, in the interest, and appearance, of fair and impartial administration of justice, UPON REMAND, these cases shall be assigned to a different District Judge, chosen randomly under the established practices of the District Court for the Southern District of New York. This newly-designated District Judge shall implement this Court's mandate staying all proceedings and otherwise await further action by the Court of Appeals on the merits of the ongoing appeals.

In taking these actions, we intimate no view on the substance or merits of the pending appeals, which have yet to be fully briefed and argued.

The mandate shall ISSUE FORTHWITH for the sole purpose of implementation of this Order and shall otherwise remain in this Court.

In the interest of judicial economy, any question, application, or further appeal regarding the scope of this Order or its implementation shall be directed to this panel, which will hear the case on the merits in due course.

Rule 12. Assignments to Visiting Judges

When a visiting judge is assigned to this district, that judge shall advise the assignment committee of the number and categories of pending cases which that judge is required or willing to accept. The assignment committee shall then transfer to that judge the required number of cases in each category with the consent of the transferor judge. If the visiting judge does not terminate the action, it shall be reassigned to the transferor judge.

Rule 13. Transfer of Related Cases

(a) Subject to the limitations set forth below, a civil case, bankruptcy appeal or motion to withdraw the bankruptcy reference will be deemed related to one or more other civil cases, appeals or motions, and will be transferred for consolidation or coordinated pretrial proceedings when the interests of justice and efficiency will be served. In determining relatedness, a judge will consider whether

- (i) a substantial saving of judicial resources would result; or
- (ii) the just efficient and economical conduct of the litigations would be advanced; or
- (iii) the convenience of the parties or witnesses would be served.

Without intending to limit the criteria considered in determining relatedness, a congruence of parties or witnesses or the likelihood of a consolidated or joint trial or joint pre-trial discovery may be deemed relevant.

(b) Criminal cases are not treated as related to civil cases or vice versa. Criminal cases are not treated as related to each other unless a motion is granted for a joint trial. Bankruptcy appeals are not considered related merely because they arise from the same bankruptcy proceeding, but are treated as related if they arise from the same order or judgment of the bankruptcy court. Motions to withdraw the reference are not considered related merely because they arise from the same bankruptcy proceeding, but are treated as related if they seek withdrawal of all or part(s) of the same adversary proceeding.

(c) Assignment of cases and proceedings that are designated as related.

(i) Disclosure of contention of relatedness.

When a civil case is filed or removed or a bankruptcy appeal or motion to withdraw the reference of an adversary proceeding from the bankruptcy court is filed, the person filing or removing shall disclose on form JSC44C any contention of relatedness. A copy of that form shall be served with the complaint, notice of removal, appeal or motion.

(ii) Civil cases that are designated as related.

A case designated as related shall be forwarded to the judge before whom the earlier-filed case is then pending who has the sole discretion to accept or reject the case. Cases rejected by the judge as not related shall be assigned by random selection.

(iii) Bankruptcy appeals that are designated as related.

Bankruptcy appeals that arise from the same bankruptcy court order or judgment as an earlier-filed appeal and are designated (by the appellant or by the Clerk of the Bankruptcy Court) as related to that appeal shall be forwarded to the judge before whom the earlier-filed appeal is then pending, who has the sole discretion to accept or reject the appeal. Such appeals that are rejected as not related, or that are not treated as related under the principles set forth in subdivision (b) above, shall be assigned by random selection.

(iv) Motions to withdraw the reference that are designated as related.

Motions to withdraw the reference of an adversary proceeding as to which such a motion is already pending that are designated (by the movant or by the Clerk of the Bankruptcy Court) as related to the earlier-filed motion to withdraw shall be forwarded to the judge before whom the earlier-filed motion is pending, who has the sole discretion to accept or reject the motion. Such motions that are rejected as not related, or that are not treated as related under the principles set forth in subdivision (b) above, shall be assigned by random selection.

(d) A party believing its case to be related to another may advise in writing the judge assigned in its case and request transfer to the judge that the party contends has the related case with the lowest docket number. If the assigned judge believes the case should be transferred, he or she shall refer the question to the judge who would receive the transfer.

(e) Motions in civil and criminal cases to consolidate, or for a joint trial, are regulated by the Federal Rules. A defendant in a criminal case may move on notice to have all of his or her sentences in this district imposed by a single judge. All such motions shall be noticed for hearing before the judge having the lowest docket number, with courtesy copies to be provided to the judge or judges having the cases with higher docket numbers.

(f) Nothing contained in this rule limits the use of Rule 14 for reassignment of all or part of any case from the docket of one judge to that of another by agreement of the respective judges.

Rule 14. Transfer of Cases by Consent

Any judge, upon written advice to the assignment committee, may transfer directly any case or any part of any case on that judge's docket to any consenting judge except where Rule 16 applies.

Rule 15. Transfers from Senior Judges

A senior judge may keep as much of his or her existing docket as that judge desires and furnish the assignment committee with a list of all cases which the judge desires to have transferred. The assignment committee will distribute the cases equally by lot to each active judge.

Rule 16. Transfer Because of Disqualification, etc.

If a judge is disqualified or if a judge has presided at a mistrial or former trial of the case, and requests reassignment, the assignment committee shall transfer the case by lot.

CODE OF CONDUCT FOR UNITED STATES JUDGES

Introduction

CANON 1: A JUDGE SHOULD UPHOLD THE INTEGRITY AND INDEPENDENCE OF THE JUDICIARY

CANON 2: A JUDGE SHOULD AVOID IMPROPRIETY AND THE APPEARANCE OF IMPROPRIETY IN ALL ACTIVITIES

(A) Respect for Law. A judge should respect and comply with the law and should act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary.

(B) Outside Influence. A judge should not allow family, social, political, financial, or other relationships to influence judicial conduct or judgment. A judge should neither lend the prestige of the judicial office to advance the private interests of the judge or others nor convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence the judge. A judge should not testify voluntarily as a character witness.

(C) Nondiscriminatory Membership. A judge should not hold membership in any organization that practices invidious discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion, or national origin.

COMMENTARY

Canon 2A. An appearance of impropriety occurs when reasonable minds, with knowledge of all the relevant circumstances disclosed by a reasonable inquiry, would conclude that the judge's honesty, integrity, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve as a judge is impaired. Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by irresponsible or improper conduct by judges. A judge must avoid all impropriety and appearance of impropriety. This prohibition applies to both professional and personal conduct. A judge must expect to be the subject of constant public scrutiny and accept freely and willingly restrictions that might be viewed as burdensome by the ordinary citizen. Because it is not practicable to list all prohibited acts, the prohibition is necessarily cast in general terms that extend to conduct by judges that is harmful although not specifically mentioned in the Code. Actual improprieties under this standard include violations of law, court rules, or other specific provisions of this Code.

Canon 2B. Testimony as a character witness injects the prestige of the judicial office into the proceeding in which the judge testifies and may be perceived as an official testimonial. A judge should discourage a party from requiring the judge to testify as a character witness except in unusual circumstances when the demands of justice require. This Canon does not create a privilege against testifying in response to an official summons.

A judge should avoid lending the prestige of judicial office to advance the private interests of the judge or others. For example, a judge should not use the judge's judicial position or title to gain advantage in litigation involving a friend or a member of the judge's family. In contracts for publication of a judge's writings, a judge should retain control over the advertising to avoid exploitation of the judge's office.

A judge should be sensitive to possible abuse of the prestige of office. A judge should not initiate communications to a sentencing judge or a probation or corrections officer but may provide information to such persons in response to a formal request. Judges may participate in the process of judicial selection by cooperating with appointing authorities and screening committees seeking names for consideration and by responding to official inquiries concerning a person being considered for a judgeship.

Canon 2C. Membership of a judge in an organization that practices invidious discrimination gives rise to perceptions that the judge's impartiality is impaired. Canon 2C refers to the current practices of the organization. Whether an organization practices invidious discrimination is often a complex question to which judges should be sensitive. The answer cannot be determined from a mere examination of an organization's current membership rolls but rather depends on how the organization selects members and other relevant factors, such as that the organization is dedicated to the preservation of religious, ethnic or cultural values of legitimate common interest to its members, or that it is in fact and effect an intimate, purely private organization whose membership limitations could not be constitutionally prohibited. See New York State Club Ass'n. Inc. v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 108 S. Ct. 2225, 101 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1988); Board of Directors of Rotary International v. Rotary Club of Duarte, 481 U.S. 537, 107 S. Ct. 1940, 95 L. Ed. 2d 474 (1987); Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 104 S. Ct. 3244, 82 L. Ed. 2d 462 (1984). Other relevant factors include the size and nature of the organization and the diversity of persons in the locale who might reasonably be considered potential members. Thus the mere absence of diverse membership does not by itself demonstrate a violation unless reasonable persons with knowledge of all the relevant circumstances would expect that the membership would be diverse in the absence of invidious discrimination. Absent such factors, an organization is generally said to discriminate invidiously if it arbitrarily excludes from membership on the basis of race, religion, sex, or national origin persons who would otherwise be admitted to membership.

Although Canon 2C relates only to membership in organizations that invidiously discriminate on the basis of race, sex, religion or national origin, a judge's membership in an organization that engages in any invidiously discriminatory membership practices prohibited by applicable law violates Canons 2 and 2A and gives the appearance of impropriety. In addition, it would be a violation of Canons 2 and 2A for a judge to arrange a meeting at a club that the judge knows practices invidious discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion, or national origin in its membership or other policies, or for the judge to use such a club regularly. Moreover, public manifestation by a judge of the judge's knowing approval of invidious discrimination on any basis gives the appearance of impropriety under Canon 2 and diminishes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, in violation of Canon 2A.

When a judge determines that an organization to which the judge belongs engages in invidious discrimination that would preclude membership under Canon 2C or under Canons 2 and 2A, the judge is permitted, in lieu of resigning, to make immediate and continuous efforts to have the organization discontinue its invidiously discriminatory practices. If the organization fails to discontinue its invidiously discriminatory practices as promptly as possible (and in all events within two years of the judge's first learning of the practices), the judge should resign immediately from the organization.

CANON 3: A JUDGE SHOULD PERFORM THE DUTIES OF THE OFFICE FAIRLY, IMPARTIALLY AND DILIGENTLY

The duties of judicial office take precedence over all other activities. In performing the duties prescribed by law, the judge should adhere to the following standards:

(A) Adjudicative Responsibilities.

- (1) A judge should be faithful to, and maintain professional competence in, the law and should not be swayed by partisan interests, public clamor, or fear of criticism.

(2) A judge should hear and decide matters assigned, unless disqualified, and should maintain order and decorum in all judicial proceedings.

(3) A judge should be patient, dignified, respectful, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity. A judge should require similar conduct of those subject to the judge's control, including lawyers to the extent consistent with their role in the adversary process.

(4) A judge should accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, and that person's lawyer, the full right to be heard according to law. Except as set out below, a judge should not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications or consider other communications concerning a pending or impending matter that are made outside the presence of the parties or their lawyers. If a judge receives an unauthorized ex parte communication bearing on the substance of a matter, the judge should promptly notify the parties of the subject matter of the communication and allow the parties an opportunity to respond, if requested. A judge may:

(a) initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications as authorized by law;

(b) when circumstances require it, permit ex parte communication for scheduling, administrative, or emergency purposes, but only if the ex parte communication does not address substantive matters and the judge reasonably believes that no party will gain a procedural, substantive, or tactical advantage as a result of the ex parte communication;

(c) obtain the written advice of a disinterested expert on the law, but only after giving advance notice to the parties of the person to be consulted and the subject matter of the advice and affording the parties reasonable opportunity to object and respond to the notice and to the advice received; or

(d) with the consent of the parties, confer separately with the parties and their counsel in an effort to mediate or settle pending matters.

(5) A judge should dispose promptly of the business of the court.

(6) A judge should not make public comment on the merits of a matter pending or impending in any court. A judge should require similar restraint by court personnel subject to the judge's direction and control. The prohibition on public comment on the merits does not extend to public statements made in the course of the judge's official duties, to explanations of court procedures, or to scholarly presentations made for purposes of legal education.

(B) Administrative Responsibilities.

(1) A judge should diligently discharge administrative responsibilities, maintain professional competence in judicial administration, and facilitate the performance of the administrative responsibilities of other judges and court personnel.

(2) A judge should not direct court personnel to engage in conduct on the judge's behalf or as the judge's representative when that conduct would contravene the Code if undertaken by the judge.

(3) A judge should exercise the power of appointment fairly and only on the basis of merit, avoiding unnecessary appointments, nepotism, and favoritism. A judge should not approve compensation of appointees beyond the fair value of services rendered.

(4) A judge with supervisory authority over other judges should take reasonable measures to ensure that they perform their duties timely and effectively.

(5) A judge should take appropriate action upon learning of reliable evidence indicating the likelihood that a judge's conduct contravened this Code or a lawyer violated applicable rules of professional conduct.

(C) Disqualification.

(1) A judge shall disqualify himself or herself in a proceeding in which the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned, including but not limited to instances in which:

(a) the judge has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party, or personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding;

(b) the judge served as a lawyer in the matter in controversy, or a lawyer with whom the judge previously practiced law served during such association as a lawyer concerning the matter, or the judge or lawyer has been a material witness;

(c) the judge knows that the judge, individually or as a fiduciary, or the judge's spouse or minor child residing in the judge's household, has a financial interest in the subject matter in controversy or in a party to the proceeding, or any other interest that could be affected substantially by the outcome of the proceeding;

(d) the judge or the judge's spouse, or a person related to either within the third degree of relationship, or the spouse of such a person is:

(i) a party to the proceeding, or an officer, director, or trustee of a party;

(ii) acting as a lawyer in the proceeding;

(iii) known by the judge to have an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding; or

(iv) to the judge's knowledge likely to be a material witness in the proceeding;

(e) the judge has served in governmental employment and in that capacity participated as a judge (in a previous judicial position), counsel, advisor, or material witness concerning the proceeding or has expressed an opinion concerning the merits of the particular case in controversy.

(2) A judge should keep informed about the judge's personal and fiduciary financial interests and make a reasonable effort to keep informed about the personal financial interests of the judge's spouse and minor children residing in the judge's household.

(3) For the purposes of this section:

(a) the degree of relationship is calculated according to the civil law system; the following relatives are within the third degree of relationship: parent, child, grandparent, grandchild, great grandparent, great grandchild, sister, brother, aunt, uncle, niece, and nephew; the listed relatives include whole and half blood relatives and most step relatives;

(b) “fiduciary” includes such relationships as executor, administrator, trustee, and guardian;

(c) “financial interest” means ownership of a legal or equitable interest, however small, or a relationship as director, advisor, or other active participant in the affairs of a party, except that:

(i) ownership in a mutual or common investment fund that holds securities is not a “financial interest” in such securities unless the judge participates in the management of the fund;

(ii) an office in an educational, religious, charitable, fraternal, or civic organization is not a “financial interest” in securities held by the organization;

(iii) the proprietary interest of a policyholder in a mutual insurance company, or a depositor in a mutual savings association, or a similar proprietary interest, is a “financial interest” in the organization only if the outcome of the proceeding could substantially affect the value of the interest;

(iv) ownership of government securities is a “financial interest” in the issuer only if the outcome of the proceeding could substantially affect the value of the securities;

(d) “proceeding” includes pretrial, trial, appellate review, or other stages of litigation.

(4) Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this Canon, if a judge would be disqualified because of a financial interest in a party (other than an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome), disqualification is not required if the judge (or the judge’s spouse or minor child) divests the interest that provides the grounds for disqualification.

(D) Remittal of Disqualification. Instead of withdrawing from the proceeding, a judge disqualified by Canon 3C(1) may, except in the circumstances specifically set out in subsections (a) through (e), disclose on the record the basis of disqualification. The judge may participate in the proceeding if, after that disclosure, the parties and their lawyers have an opportunity to confer outside the presence of the judge, all agree in writing or on the record that the judge should not be disqualified, and the judge is then willing to participate. The agreement should be incorporated in the record of the proceeding.

COMMENTARY

Canon 3A(3). The duty to hear all proceedings fairly and with patience is not inconsistent with the duty to dispose promptly of the business of the court. Courts can be efficient and businesslike while being patient and deliberate.

The duty under Canon 2 to act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary applies to all the judge’s activities, including the discharge of the judge’s adjudicative and administrative responsibilities. The duty to be respectful includes the responsibility to avoid comment or behavior that could reasonably be interpreted as harassment, prejudice or bias.

Canon 3A(4). The restriction on ex parte communications concerning a proceeding includes communications from lawyers, law teachers, and others who are not participants in the proceeding. A judge may consult with other judges or with court personnel whose function is to aid the judge in carrying out adjudicative responsibilities. A judge should make reasonable efforts to ensure that law clerks and other court personnel comply with this provision.

A judge may encourage and seek to facilitate settlement but should not act in a manner that coerces any party into surrendering the right to have the controversy resolved by the courts.

Canon 3A(5). In disposing of matters promptly, efficiently, and fairly, a judge must demonstrate due regard for the rights of the parties to be heard and to have issues resolved without unnecessary cost or delay. A judge should monitor and supervise cases to reduce or eliminate dilatory practices, avoidable delays, and unnecessary costs.

Prompt disposition of the court's business requires a judge to devote adequate time to judicial duties, to be punctual in attending court and expeditious in determining matters under submission, and to take reasonable measures to ensure that court personnel, litigants, and their lawyers cooperate with the judge to that end.

Canon 3A(6). The admonition against public comment about the merits of a pending or impending matter continues until the appellate process is complete. If the public comment involves a case from the judge's own court, the judge should take particular care so that the comment does not denigrate public confidence in the judiciary's integrity and impartiality, which would violate Canon 2A. A judge may comment publicly on proceedings in which the judge is a litigant in a personal capacity, but not on mandamus proceedings when the judge is a litigant in an official capacity (but the judge may respond in accordance with Fed. R. App. P. 21(b)).

Canon 3B(3). A judge's appointees include assigned counsel, officials such as referees, commissioners, special masters, receivers, guardians, and personnel such as law clerks, secretaries, and judicial assistants. Consent by the parties to an appointment or an award of compensation does not relieve the judge of the obligation prescribed by this subsection.

Canon 3B(5). Appropriate action may include direct communication with the judge or lawyer, other direct action if available, reporting the conduct to the appropriate authorities, or, when the judge believes that a judge's or lawyer's conduct is caused by drugs, alcohol, or a medical condition, making a confidential referral to an assistance program. Appropriate action may also include responding to a subpoena to testify or otherwise participating in judicial or lawyer disciplinary proceedings; a judge should be candid and honest with disciplinary authorities.

Canon 3C. Recusal considerations applicable to a judge's spouse should also be considered with respect to a person other than a spouse with whom the judge maintains both a household and an intimate relationship.

Canon 3C(1)(c). In a criminal proceeding, a victim entitled to restitution is not, within the meaning of this Canon, a party to the proceeding or the subject matter in controversy. A judge who has a financial interest in the victim of a crime is not required by Canon 3C(1)(c) to disqualify from the criminal proceeding, but the judge must do so if the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned under Canon 3C(1) or if the judge has an interest that could be substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding under Canon 3C(1)(d)(iii).

Canon 3C(1)(d)(ii). The fact that a lawyer in a proceeding is affiliated with a law firm with which a relative of the judge is affiliated does not of itself disqualify the judge. However, if "the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned" under Canon 3C(1), or the relative is known by the judge to have an interest in the law firm that could be "substantially affected by the outcome of the proceeding" under Canon 3C(1)(d)(iii), the judge's disqualification is required.

4 THE COURT: Not until I reach you.
5 Good afternoon, Mr. Moore.
6 MR. MOORE: Good afternoon, Judge.
7 THE COURT: Good afternoon, Ms. Costello.
8 MS. COSTELLO: Yes, good afternoon, your Honor.
9 THE COURT: Mr. Franklin.
10 And who is the person in between all of you?
11 MS. COSTELLO: Your Honor, this is Garrett Wright, he 12 is a recent law graduate from our office.
13 THE COURT: And good afternoon, Ms. Grossman and Ms.
14 Donahue.
15 Yes, what is it?
16 MS. GROSSMAN: There may be some reference to some 17 confidential material during our conference, and I just wanted
18 to bring that to the Court's attention, in that we believe the 19 courtroom might have to be sealed for a very brief moment. For 20 now, plaintiff's counsel is not prepared to raise those issues
21 while we have other people here in the courtroom.
22 I think we are fine to keep the courtroom open.
23 THE COURT: I know who two of the people are, they are 24 here on the criminal case. Who are the other people?

THE COURT: Are you both attorneys?

A VOICE: I am an attorney.

I am a paralegal.

THE COURT: They are -- I understand your point. As soon as I can, I'd be happy to get the criminal case out of the courtroom. As soon as I can.

Let me get started on this matter of Daniels versus The City of New York.

I have a letter from the plaintiffs dated December 14, 2007. And they are seeking a number of things. But I suppose on the most immediate basis they are seeking some kind of an order extending the Court supervision by no less than a few months, for the sole purpose of letting them fully brief the request for relief in this letter. So there is no rush.

So they are saying, the best way to have no rush and have no air is to have the defendant consent to a two-or-three month adjournment minimally, just so everybody can get these issues fully briefed and on the table. And if the Court denies all the relief, so be it.

But rather than have them work it out in eight or nine days, you are saying just to get some kind of interest of justice extension or something.

So I won't go into the rest of the relief they seek, more in terms of summarizing the letters, but the largest

7c1PdanC

1 overall summary is that there has been a lack of compliance in 2 various ways with the stipulation of settlement. And so the
3 Court should modify the stipulation of settlement order,
4 specific performance of certain aspects of the stipulation of 5 settlement.

6 And then they ask for the third point of relief, which
7 is what I think you were referring to, where they think there
8 should be a modification of the protective order as to some of 9 the terms that have been declared confidential.

10 One reason is they say the Court will have to use some 11 of the confidential information to determine what to do with 12 the motion. But, secondly, they are saying some of it has been 13 disclosed by the defendant in another context, and it is 14 already much discussed, and you should withdraw the designation
15 if it has been publicly disclosed.

16 Then I received a letter in response dated December
17 19, but actually received in chambers December 20, which was 18 yesterday. And yesterday was a relatively busy day on the 19 bench. So the long and short of it, I haven't had a chance to 20 study the attachments carefully. But I did have the 21 opportunity to read the letter, which itself was long, I guess,
22 the pages aren't numbered so I can't tell how many, there is a
23 lot of single-spaced pages, five or six. And I did read them.

24 And the quick summary of the defense letter is that 25 plaintiffs want to pretend that the settlement agreement says

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 things it doesn't say. So the alleged breaches aren't breaches
2 at all, because the settlement doesn't require the defendant to 3 do what the plaintiffs say is a breach.

4 And defendants write a number of times in the letter,
5 plaintiffs may have wanted the stipulation of settlement to say
6 these things, but it doesn't. And there were intense and 7 detailed settlement negotiations. And if they didn't get what
8 they didn't get, they can't complain about it now.

9 And so the defendant opposes all the requests for 10 relief, opposes any modification of the stipulation, opposes 11 any order for specific performance, opposes any extension of 12 the December 31 deadline, and opposes the modification of the 13 protective order.

14 All of that said, it would nonetheless be helpful to 15 the Court and all the parties, in the nine days remaining 16 between now and the 31st of December, to be -- deny this in an 17 orderly fashion by extending the deadline.

18 If the defendant refuses to do that, then the city is 19 will write briefs every day for the next nine days. And if 20 that's how you want to spend your Christmas and New Year's,
21 that's up to you.

22 You may have the better of all the arguments, but I
23 need to get enough of a record to figure it out. And if you
24 want to do that much all through Christmas and New Year's.

25 Who is carrying the lead?

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MR. MOORE: Ms. Costello.

2 THE COURT: Well, Ms. Costello, I think you have
3 sought of the burden to make your oral argument the equivalent
4 of a reply letter. I think you need to answer all the points
5 that Ms. Grossman made in her very thorough submission point by 6 point. Because her points, as you notice, stay closely away
7 from the merits, so to speak. And they try not to tell me
8 about whether or not, you know, there is a policy of 9 discrimination, or whether your statistics show discrimination.
10 They want to talk procedure and they want to talk about what is 11 or isn't in the stipulation. What rights you have or don't 12 have in the stipulation.

13 And I understand that is a contract and they are 14 saying, no matter how bad things may be, that's not part of 15 this lawsuit.

16 Do you have another lawsuit to bring?

17 But they placed some interesting alliance on the 18 Latino Officers Association of The City of New York, where they 19 quoted the Court as denying any further relief. And they 20 thought that was a pretty good precedent for them. And it did
21 seem to be a pretty good precedent for them.

22 For example, at one point the Court -- now there is no
23 guarantees in discrimination in the settlement document, and 24 that Court said, quote, even a convincing demonstration of 25 persistent discrimination would not mean that the defendants

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 are violating the provisions of the settlement agreement.

2 That, sort of, is exactly the situation I may be in.

3 You may be sort of seeing problems that are all very
4 interesting but not part of this settlement agreement. So I
5 think you need to give me a reply brief, if you wish, orally.

6 MS. COSTELLO: Yes, your Honor. I can try my best.

7 One point that the city raises about just the fact
8 that there are no in substantial remedies in the consent
9 decree.

10 THE COURT: I have the consent decree. I think
11 somebody attached it as Exhibit A.

12 MS. GROSSMAN: Yes, your Honor.

13 THE COURT: So you are going to have to show me, don't 14 tell me you disagree, show me the language.

15 MS. COSTELLO: In section C1, your Honor, in section
16 C1.

17 Let me just back up one second, your Honor. I think 18 there were two ways, and this is part of what we would like to 19 brief for the Court, there are two ways that the Court could 20 extend the life of the consent decree and also grant our 21 request for modification. One is within the Court's equitable 22 powers and the second is standard under Ruffo for modification.

23 I think what Ms. Grossman's letter focuses on is the 24 straight reading, the non-compliance and specific performance
25 and contempt proceeding that would result, flow from that which

7clPdanC

1 the dispute resolution mechanism in the agreement itself, if
2 you look at the standard under Ruffo, a much more flexible 3 standard that takes into account the public interest and the 4 change in circumstances. The city doesn't address that at all.

5 THE COURT: No, they never cite Ruffo, I don't think
6 they did. I read it fairly quickly.

7 MS. COSTELLO: Under the standard in Ruffo, we think
8 that the modification would be appropriate.

9 Putting that aside for the moment, and just looking at 10 the language of the consent decree, section C1 of the 11 stipulation requires that the NYPD shall have a written policy
12 regarding racial or ethnic or national origin profiling, that 13 complies with the United States Constitution and the New York
14 State Constitution.

15 And I think that we have shown that there is evidence
16 of racial profiling going on.

17 THE COURT: Even if there is evidence of racial 18 profiling, that paragraph doesn't have anything to do with 19 that.

20 It says that the NYPD shall have a written policy that 21 complies with the Constitution of both the United States and 22 New York State. Okay, that's what they have to have.

23 Do they have -- let me give you an example, let's say
24 they had a written policy that complies with it, and that they
25 violated it all the time. They wouldn't have violated

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 paragraph 1. Paragraph 1 says you have to have a written
2 policy that complies with the --

3 MS. COSTELLO: -- if you read paragraph C1 in 4 connection with, which requires training on the policy,
5 training on the officers in stop and frisk procedures, in 6 section E there is a provision in there for palm cards which go
7 out to individuals in the community. If they believe they have
8 been improperly stopped and frisked they can file a complaint
9 with the Civilian Complaint Review Board.

10 We think that all of that means there was an 11 implication of this policy --

12 THE COURT: -- you are asking me to rewrite your 13 settlement agreement. This is hypothetical, it is not a fact.

14 I don't want anybody to be confused by reading the 15 record. I am saying hypothetically if they have a written
16 policy that complies with the Constitution of the United States
17 and of New York State, regarding racial and ethnic origin
18 profiling, they satisfied number 1, paragraph C1.

19 Even if there were evidence that they were violating 20 their own policy, they still say that.

21 Number 1 only requires them to have appropriate
22 written policy.

23 That seems to be the whole point of this notion that 24 there is no guarantees in this agreement. Nowhere in the 25 agreement is the city guaranteed that it will not have an

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 inappropriate racial profiling. There is no guarantee in here.
2 It is exactly the same thing that Judge Kaplan was trying to 3 say.

4 MS. COSTELLO: If you look at section C2, which says
5 that the NYPD may alter the policy --

6 THE COURT: -- let me read that.

7 It says: (Reading) The NYPD may alter the racial
8 profiling policy at any time in compliance with paragraph C1.

9 That just means if they have the policy that isn't in 10 compliance, and they want to make a written policy that is in 11 compliance, I don't see that number 2 provides you the 12 guarantee that you seem to be talking about.

13 MS. COSTELLO: I think number 2 also relates to 14 altering the policy. And I think that the intent of this 15 agreement was not to bargain for a policy that meant nothing
16 that the NYPD could just go out and violate people's Fourth
17 Amendment rights and Fourteenth Amendment rights with no
18 recourse to plaintiffs. I think that would --

19 THE COURT: -- maybe it is an -- why don't you file a
20 lawsuit?

21 MS. COSTELLO: We did, we are here.

22 THE COURT: No, you are struggling with the December
23 31, 2007 deadline in a 1999 case. And if you got proof of 24 inappropriate racial profiling in a good constitutional case, 25 why don't you bring a lawsuit? You can certainly mark it as

7clPdanC

1 related.

2 How could it not be related to this whole long seven
3 or eight years we have lived together on this case? Because 4 you are trying to put a square peg in a round hole. And trying
5 to force yourselves to argue what the settlement means, that it
6 doesn't mean if you have a timely lawsuit -- you seem to have
7 compiled interesting arguments Ms. Grossman has not rebutted --
8 maybe she did, that's why we didn't do something, because we 9 didn't want them to write this letter, she -- let's just say
10 she hasn't substantially responded to your letter. If one had 11 only your letter, it would look like you have a lawsuit. So 12 instead of struggling to telling me about a stipulation of 13 settlement, why don't you craft a lawsuit?

14 MS. COSTELLO: We could, but the only other issue
15 is --

16 THE COURT: That's what would I like to turn to.
17 Can we talk about the noncompliant?

18 MR. MOORE: Judge, could I just say a few things,
19 before we do that? About the notion that what we were 20 bargaining for was simply a piece of paper that had no
21 substance to it.

22 THE COURT: I didn't say it had no substance. But it
23 didn't have the word guarantee. Didn't she write in her letter
24 there were no guarantees? And Judge Kaplan talked about that 25 in his settlement. I didn't have time to read his decision, I

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 only read these two letters. Sometimes a Judge has some time
2 and sometime not. I didn't have a lot of time, especially the 3 city's letter just came in yesterday.

4 MR. MOORE: To the extent that given my involvement
5 with the case in the beginning, I can shed any light on that,
6 on what our understanding was, about what we were bargaining
7 for.

8 We believed that we were getting a policy that the 9 city would put into effect. That was, it is reason why we 10 brought the lawsuit. And certainly as Ms. Costello said, there
11 were not just -- they didn't just agree to change the written 12 policy, they agreed to do several things.

13 THE COURT: But we have to find them chapter and 14 verse, because their argument -- I'd like to interrupt you just 15 for a minute, and take this criminal case.

16 (Recess)

17 THE COURT:: I think you were speaking, Mr. Moore.

18 MR. MOORE: I had been making a general observation
19 about my understanding in the course of our negotiating this 20 decree.

21 I find it hard to believe that The City of New York
22 would, in effect, say to this Court, or to anybody, well, we 23 have a policy, but we don't have to follow it.

24 THE COURT: I was saying as a hypothetical. I didn't
25 say they said --

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MR. MOORE: -- I think they say that in their letter,
2 that we can change the policy -- we can -- as long as we have a
3 written policy, we can essentially do whatever we want.

4 I just think that if that's, in fact, what the 5 position of the city of New York is, it is a significant
6 difference from what we understood we were getting, which was a
7 policy that had some substance to it. Not just a policy on 8 paper.

9 It's sort of like passing the Thirteenth Amendment
10 abolishing slavery as long as we have an amendment that you
11 can't have slavery. But in practice we still have slavery.

12 It seems to me it is a hyper technical interpretation
13 of the words in the decree. The decree was meant to address
14 what we believed was a serious issue with respect to racial 15 profiling which, apparently, has not gone away. And even their 16 own Rand study that they commissioned, suggests that at least 17 with respect to the frisks, maybe not the stops, but even the 18 frisks, that there is a racial disparity, that's their own
19 expert's testimony, their own expert's report.

20 So I just find the notion that we were trying to 21 basically engage in a law school exercise of getting a policy
22 that had no substance --

23 THE COURT: -- well --

24 MR. MOORE: -- contrary to my understanding and 25 contrary --

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7c1PdanC

1 THE COURT: -- I will quote from page 4 of the letter,
2 the first full paragraph.

3 (Reading) In conclusion, it is important to state
4 that plaintiffs vigorously bargained for a provision which 5 would create for an obligation on the part of the defendants to 6 guarantee that there would be no racial profiling. The city
7 refused to agree to such a term for reasons here are 8 negotiated.

9 MR. MOORE: I don't know, there is no citation to 10 that, there is no -- it is sort of, in a way, it was -- maybe
11 it was by being silent they hoped that we wouldn't say to you,
12 say to the city, and you are going to comply with that, you are 13 going to actually implement the policy.

14 I don't think -- I mean, a municipality that agrees to 15 adopt a policy should be then saying, now that we have adopted
16 a written policy, we don't have to implement it in practice.
17 When, in fact, they were making -- they were, you know, there
18 was information sent out that there was a racial --

19 THE COURT: -- what I am trying to say -- I am sure I
20 am going to get in trouble for saying it, for $65 you can bring 21 that lawsuit. You can simply --

22 MR. MOORE: $350.

23 THE COURT: I knew I had it wrong.

24 The city violates its own written policy, the city has 25 a policy that violates -- they have violated their policy, here

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 is the proof of it, please give us the remedy. Injunction or 2 damages, or whatever lawyers ask for in compliance.

3 So for $350 you can bring that lawsuit and it is 4 timely.

5 I don't understand why we have to potentially have,
6 you know, months of briefing when it does fit under this
7 stipulation or it doesn't, that Ruffo applies or it doesn't 8 that the Court has the power to extend the supervision, that we 9 want an immediate appeal to the circuit. Why do you need that 10 if you have a lawsuit? Bring it. They have a written policy,
11 right?

12 MS. GROSSMAN: Yes, your Honor.

13 THE COURT: If you think they are violating their 14 written policy, sue them.

15 MS. COSTELLO: Your Honor, just two quick points. One 16 is about the point your Honor's raising about just filing a new 17 lawsuit.

18 The one issue for us in that particular scenario is 19 that the protective order is still in effect. Once this case
20 ends, we have to give back all of the data. So unless the 21 Court is prepared to modify the protective order and lift it,
22 we would not have the benefit of that data until we filed a new 23 case and engaged in discovery and battles with the city to get 24 that same information again, and then another battle over a 25 protective order again.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 So we see it in the interests of judicial economy, if
2 the Court would lift the protective order in this case, since 3 under the language of the stipulation -- and we pointed, if the 4 information is otherwise made publicly available.

5 THE COURT: That's something I do want to talk to the 6 city about.

7 If it is publicly available, then I don't understand
8 why you can't use publicly-available information in drafting 9 your suit, or for whatever other purpose. If something is 10 publicly available and I can get it and anybody who is in the 11 public library can get it, or using the Internet can get it, if 12 anybody calls the city's green book office, can get it, then it
13 is public.

14 Can you do this from public information or not?

15 MS. COSTELLO: It is not that publicly available.

16 THE COURT: You can't have it both ways. If it is 17 public you can use it and I don't think the city can ever argue
18 that you can't.

19 Once you backtrack and say it is really not public,
20 then you are making their argument.

21 MS. COSTELLO: It is public. The only problem is that 22 the information that the city has put out, just as Ms.

23 Grossman's letter said, it is our data, we can use it however 24 we would like to. The information that's been put out by the 25 Rand Corporation, and we have a copy of the study, is that the

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 Rand Corporation and the NYPD's spin using magic wands about
2 what the data means, our analysis and conversation with an
3 expert shows us different things, that the Rand information has 4 used benchmark and other statistical methods to explain away.
5 So it is publicly available in the sense that the NYPD and the 6 Rand publication has written details in the Daily News and 7 otherwise made that information available. But in the sense
8 the data that we have that may differ from what the city has 9 put out, is not publicly available. Because that's our 10 analysis and that's our impressions and our statisticians and 11 numbers of what the patterns show.

12 So our information is different than what the city
13 has, some of which is the same.

14 Rand reached some of the same conclusions about the 15 data. But they have also ignored some of the other
16 information, particularly racial disparities and the frisks
17 leading to arrests and the weapons recovery that we think are 18 indicative of racial profiling.

19 MR. FRANKLIN: Your Honor, in terms how the data is 20 collected, we have the data on discs from the city, which makes 21 it that much easier to compute.

22 This information is public, but it is public in hard
23 copies. And so it is public not only through the Rand study, 24 but also through the study that they, the city, gave to the 25 city counsel. But they are both access to the data is here,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 but it is in a format which is highly unusable in terms of 2 making statistical analysis and breaking down data, which would
3 take us months to recompile.

4 THE COURT: As I was saying earlier, Ms. Costello
5 responded with how difficult it would be to get the material
6 again. There is enough in the public record to craft the suit.
7 And then in that suit simply say, we want produced all that was 8 produced in the 1999 lawsuit.

9 I don't know how you could lose getting it. It may be 10 a question of whether it is still going to be under protective 11 order or not. But I can hardly imagine not getting it. You
12 know what I am saying? It is so obvious to me that any Judge
13 would require them to reproduce it to you in the same format
14 that you have it, that you will have it again. Whether or not 15 it remains confidential.

16 MR. FRANKLIN: We'll have it again, but we have to go
17 through the same process we have gone through. We have to turn 18 everything back to the city under this protective order. So if 19 we get it back we have to again recalculate the same 20 information that we already have.

21 THE COURT:: You have to go through recalculating?
22 Why would that be?

23 MR. FRANKLIN: Because under the protective order we 24 have to give them back that information.

25 THE COURT: Not just what they gave you?

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC.

1 MR. FRANKLIN: If my reading is correct, it's what
2 they gave us and --

3 MS. COSTELLO: -- everything derived from the UF250
4 database. So it is the actual physical discs that the data is 5 contained on, which are thousands and -- tens -- hundreds of 6 thousands of entries, as well as any information that we
7 derived. So any of the work that our statistician has done
8 with coding, would have to be given back to the city. We 9 couldn't retain that information.

10 THE COURT:: Your attorney work product and published
11 material, all that stuff would have to go back?

12 That seems odd to me. I don't know why it can't be 13 stored under the terms of confidentiality. This is not 14 practical.

15 MS. COSTELLO: Your Honor, if I could, I am just going 16 to take one minute and look at the protective order to make 17 sure.

18 MR. FRANKLIN: Unless the city disputes that.

19 THE COURT: We aren't getting too far off the 20 substance, are we?

21 MR. MOORE: Judge, the protective order --

22 THE COURT:: -- where is that? Do I have that?

23 MR. MOORE: I don't think you have a copy.

24 THE COURT: Do you have that, Ms. Grossman? Is that 25 attached --

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MS. GROSSMAN: -- your Honor --

2 MR. MOORE: -- I can hand you up a copy, Judge.

3 THE COURT:: This is June 31, 2000 -- I'm sorry --
4 January 31, 2000. Yes, it will be eight years this January.

5 MR. MOORE: Paragraph 7, I think, is the provision
6 that is at issue here.

7 THE COURT:: Let's read it. (Reading) Within 30 days
8 after the termination of this case, including any appeals, the 9 confidential materials, including all copies, notes and other
10 materials containing or referring to information derived
11 therefrom, shall be returned to the producing party's 12 attorneys, or upon their consent, destroyed. And all persons
13 who possess such materials shall verify their return or 14 destruction by affidavit furnished to the producing party's 15 attorneys. And paragraph 8 says: (Reading) The terms of this 16 order may be modified by further order of the Court.

17 So obviously 30 days after termination of this case is 18 January 30, 2008, right? If the case terminates December 31 --

19 MS. GROSSMAN: -- I think, your Honor, the termination
20 date was the termination when we entered into the effective
21 date of the agreement.

22 THE COURT: It couldn't be, because -- they would have 23 owed this stuff back to you years ago.

24 MS. GROSSMAN: They did. They returned all documents
25 they were required to return when the agreement was executed,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 and when it was finalized by the Court.

2 So the agreement incorporates the protective order and 3 basically says that the plaintiffs need to return the 4 documents, maintain the confidentiality, and return them after 5 the agreement sunsets. That's expected after the agreement
6 terminates.

7 The protective order was, the plaintiffs were subject
8 to the protective order, to maintain the confidentiality,
9 but --

10 THE COURT: -- I am not following you at all.

11 I still say they don't have to return all that they 12 now still retain until January 30, 2008, thirty days after the 13 termination of this case.

14 I am still supervising this case, that's why you are 15 worried about my extending it even one day, because my 16 supervision runs out on December 31, '07. So I still have this 17 case. So, therefore, it is not 30 days after the termination
18 of this case. They are talking about the very material they 19 have --

20 MR. MOORE: We got material --

21 THE COURT: -- as recently as October. So, of course,
22 you didn't return it 30 days after the case number was closed.
23 Obviously it is not due back till January 30 or 31st of 2008.

24 All I am saying is, by then if you have a lawsuit
25 pending and need the very same material, and I have the

7clPdanC

1 authority to modify the terms of this order by a further order
2 of the Court, which the city agreed to, then I will, and I will
3 say, you have the material, hold on to it, remains
4 confidential, somebody says otherwise, and use it as you need
5 to use it in your new lawsuit.

6 I don't want to play games here, if there is a
7 violation of the city's racial profiling policy -- that's not 8 what it is called,.

9 MR. MOORE: That's what it is called.

10 THE COURT: Okay. Strange. Kind of a --

11 MR. MOORE: -- it should be nonracial.

12 THE COURT: Yes. If there is a violation of it, there
13 is a violation, and that's a lawsuit, and that's that.

14 It still strikes me as making it more difficult, a 15 square peg in a round hole, to force it into this stipulation
16 of settlement, and got into all these questions about you tried 17 to get a guarantee.

18 You didn't get a guarantee, you fought for it, but 19 they stood firm and they didn't get it to you. La, la, la.
20 But okay, this is only the beginning. We can go through their 21 whole letter and respond to all their points. We didn't get 22 too far. You were going to -- we started with C1.

23 MR. MOORE: Just one second, Judge.

24 THE COURT: Yes.

25 (Discussion off the record)

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MS. GROSSMAN: Your Honor, if I may just address the
2 issue of the confidentiality.

3 THE COURT: Yes.

4 MS. GROSSMAN: If you were to look at paragraph 4 --
5 I'm sorry, H4.

6 THE COURT: What stipulation of settlement, A4?

7 MS. GROSSMAN: H4.

8 THE COURT: Yes, okay.

9 MS. GROSSMAN: If you would bear with me, your Honor.
10 If I could just walk you through the first and explain what it
11 refers to. The first on paragraph 4 page 11 it says, all
12 confidential documents --

13 THE COURT: -- wait a minute, I am on page 11 -- oh,
14 H, okay.

15 MS. GROSSMAN: (Reading) All confidential documents
16 subject to the January 31, 2000 protective order, and copies
17 made thereof, produced to plaintiffs by defendants prior to the 18 effective date, shall be returned to the Corporation Counsel's
19 office upon the effective date. Unless prior to that date
20 defendants have expressly authorized the retention of specific 21 documents itemized in writing by plaintiffs until, at the 22 latest, the termination of the stipulation.

23 Now, let me just take a break. That information was 24 all the documents provided during the litigation. The 25 plaintiffs complied with that provision in the agreement and

7clPdanC

1 returned all the documents to the city with the exception of a
2 few items that they wrote -- put in writing, and they were 3 allowed to maintain.

4 Now we move on to all documents provided to plaintiffs
5 in any form by defendants under the terms and during the course
6 of this stipulation shall be deemed confidential, and 7 plaintiffs shall return to the Corporation Counsel's office all 8 such documents, and any copies made thereof, upon the 9 termination of this stipulation.

10 So at the very least we know that posteffective date
11 of the agreement, the plaintiffs, under the terms of this 12 agreement, which they contracted for, which we all agreed to,
13 are to be returned to the city.

14 THE COURT: Well, that's good, but I don't think it is 15 good enough. Because I think the Court's order is ambiguous or 16 contradictory to that by saying that it extends to 30 days
17 after the termination of this case.

18 Now, you want to interpret the phrase termination of 19 this case differently than I do. I don't have it in front of 20 me, I will find it. Actually it is attached to this in the 21 protective -- the protective order --

22 MR. FRANKLIN: -- it's the last attachment.

23 THE COURT: I have it dated January 31, 2000. Is that 24 part of the stipulation of settlement -- yes, it must be,
25 Exhibit C to the stipulation of settlement. And the exhibit

7clPdanC

1 itself says, the very date of the termination of this case. So
2 I have essentially two clauses of the same stipulation of 3 settlement that disagree. And --

4 MR. MOORE: -- essentially what we are talking about 5 is 30 days.

6 THE COURT: Oh, I understand. But the city does not 7 want you to have these to be able to craft this complaint. And 8 it also seems childish to me. It is in your letter, it is all
9 there already.

10 As I say, I have got two conflicting clauses in front
11 of me, they are both part of the settlement, .

12 MS. GROSSMAN: I believe, your Honor, if you were to 13 look at paragraph 4, the plain meaning --

14 THE COURT: -- 4?

15 MS. GROSSMAN: -- the same --

16 THE COURT: -- H4.

17 MS. GROSSMAN: H4.

18 THE COURT:: I know what H4 said, I don't even argue
19 that it is wrong, but it conflicts with Exhibit C. Exhibit C
20 tells me that within 30 days of termination of the case, and I
21 say this case is open until the Court's supervision ends on 22 December 31 of 2007 --

23 MR. MOORE: -- Judge --

24 THE COURT: -- and it says that I have the power to 25 modify that protective order at any time.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 In terms of this -- by further order of the Court.

2 So I certainly have the power to modify that

3 protective order until December 31 of '07.

4 And so to that extent, I surely would modify it to my

5 own reading of it, which is 30 days after the case terminates,

6 which is January 30, '08.

7 I am happy to keep going with your letter if you want

8 to go through chapter and verse, and try to still make your

9 points in your letter, try to convince me. I don't like the

10 idea of having to work on it in the next eight days under that

11 gun. But that's what it is coming to. It does not seem to me

12 that would be.

13 MS. COSTELLO: Your Honor, putting aside the issue of 14 the modification as it relates to the racial profiling issues.

15 THE COURT: Let's turn to something else then.

16 MS. COSTELLO: The specific performance issues other

17 than that which would include the training.

18 THE COURT:: Let's talk about it. The city wrote

19 about that too. I don't see a subheading actually called

20 training.

22 MR. MOORE: Subsection C.

23 THE COURT: Subsection C. There it is, training,

24 okay.

25 MS. COSTELLO: Basically under the agreement section,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 and I will point the Court to C5, and actually section E, of 2 the stipulation --

4 MS. COSTELLO: Yes.

5 THE COURT: Training.

6 MS. COSTELLO: We've had several conversations with 7 the city through letters and verbally about the fact that there
8 has never been any verification that the training specified in 9 section E has occurred.

10 The city's position is, as I understand it, is that we 11 are not entitled to it. And we would disagree with that.

12 THE COURT: Let's look at the plain language of the 13 settlement agreement.

14 I don't know how much we are going to have to read,
15 but we will read as much as we have to.

16 1: The NYPD has conducted in-service training
17 regarding the racial profiling policy, which has been presented
18 to NYPD commands. The NYPD shall provide annual in-service
19 training regarding the racial profiling policy.

20 2: The NYPD shall maintain that portion of the police 21 academy curriculum that pertains to training regarding the 22 racial profiling policy.

23 3: The NYPD shall continue to train police officers
24 about the legal and factual bases for conducting and 25 documenting stop, question and frisk activity. Continue to

7clPdanC

1 implement the police academy curriculum for training police
2 officer recruits about the legal and factual bases for 3 conducting and documenting stop, question and frisk activity.
4 And continue to provide training for police academy
5 instructors.

6 MR. MOORE: -- Judge --

7 THE COURT: -- about the legal and factual bases for 8 conducting for and -- and then all I can say is that paragraph
9 4 says, the NYPD shall continue to train, and 5 says the NYPD
10 shall continue to provide training.

11 Number 6 says, the police academy will continue to 12 consider informally, factual incidents brought to its attention
13 for use in training.

14 7 says, the NYPD is reviewing the recruit curriculum
15 and is part of the process, the Commissioner will conduct a 16 review.

17 8 says, the NYPD will continue to provide full
18 promoted sergeants and lieutenants with training,

19 9: The municipal defendants have provided to -- and 20 10 says: The NYPD shall continue to document training provided 21 for in this stipulation in the same manner and consistent with 22 existing practices and procedures employed by the NYPD.

23 Now, I have read it all. Nowhere does it say they 24 will turn anything over to class counsel or report to class
25 counsel.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MR. MOORE: To verify, the word verification does not
2 appear.

3 THE COURT: Or report or turn over --

4 MR. MOORE: -- if you look at subsection C5 of the 5 agreement.

6 THE COURT: Okay, let me now turn to C5.

7 The NYPD shall supervise, monitor and train officers
8 regarding the racial profiling policy as set forth below.

9 MR. MOORE: So that's an affirmative duty on the NYPD.

10 THE COURT: That's true.

11 MR. MOORE: To supervise, monitor and train officers
12 regarding the racial profiling.

13 In order to determine whether they are fulfilling
14 their duty, whether they have lived up to the terms of this 15 agreement, we would argue that they should tell us what they 16 are doing.

17 THE COURT: Why didn't you get that into the 18 agreement? Why didn't you say, shall produce on a quarterly
19 basis its training materials for counsel's review?

20 There is nothing in there. There are no obligations
21 other than to do it. But not to let you know through 22 documentation.

23 MR. MOORE: But if they are not doing it, the only way 24 we can know if they are not doing it is by asking them if they 25 are doing it.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 THE COURT: I understand.

2 MR. MOORE: It seems to me that that's an inherent
3 obligation on the part of the city.

4 THE COURT: But this thing was signed January 9, 2004.
5 I mean, that's almost four years ago. Did you ever write them
6 a demand letter and say, please document that you are doing
7 training? Or we believe you are -- or we believe you are not
8 doing training, we are worried about that, please send us
9 copies --

10 MS. COSTELLO: -- we did --

11 THE COURT:: -- why are we doing this on December 21
12 of '07?

13 MS. COSTELLO: We did, your Honor, we asked in April, 14 and some of those letters were provided to the Court.

15 THE COURT: '07?

16 MS. COSTELLO: Yes, this year. We asked them in 17 February, in April.

18 THE COURT: For what?

19 MS. COSTELLO: For proof that they were conducting the 20 training in accordance --

21 THE COURT: -- and their response was?

22 MS. COSTELLO: That they did not read the stipulation
23 to require it.

24 THE COURT: Why didn't you come to court then? It is 25 nine days before December 31.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MS. COSTELLO: Part of this, your Honor, is that we
2 were attempting to work it out with the city. Ms. Grossman and 3 I, in September, were --

4 THE COURT: -- I hear you. But the position you put 5 me in is to have some kind of real brief motion, you would like
6 to brief these issues, you would like to brief Ruffo and its 7 progeny orally. You want your brief due on 10 a.m. on the 26th
8 and their brief at 10 on the 28th, and the reply on the 31st?

9 MS. COSTELLO: That's what we proposed, there be six
10 months of extension.

11 THE COURT: Haven't we been down that road once?

12 MS. COSTELLO: Yes, we have, your Honor. Some of the 13 cases that we cited before we would still say that the 14 equitable power of the Court --

15 THE COURT:: Didn't I do it and undo it?

16 MS. COSTELLO: You did undo it.

17 THE COURT: And wrote an opinion too.

18 MS. COSTELLO: Part of that, your Honor, was that we 19 had not followed the dispute resolution in the decree and we 20 have --

21 THE COURT: -- they wrote you didn't. Didn't you
22 write that, Ms. Grossman, they didn't follow the dispute
23 resolution again?

24 MS. GROSSMAN: That's right.

25 MS. COSTELLO: We disagree.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 THE COURT: But I am not being given much time to
2 understand that. They are saying you didn't, they are saying
3 something about 30 days. In what way didn't they file a
4 dispute resolution --

5 MS. GROSSMAN: -- they were supposed to wait until 30
6 days to seek relief from the Court.

7 THE COURT: Wait until 30 days from what?

8 MS. GROSSMAN: From the date that they have, gave 9 notification to us. The notification that they are required to 10 give is by fax and hand service.

11 THE COURT: And they faxed you a letter.

12 MS. GROSSMAN: Friday evening.

13 THE COURT: December what?

14 MS. GROSSMAN: November 30, Friday evening, 7:03 p.m.
15 And they did not deliver a document by hand Friday for us to 16 have notice. And it wasn't until Monday, December 3, there was 17 no by hand delivery at all. So they haven't complied with the 18 terms of the agreement in terms of giving proper notice, which 19 then would bring us beyond the December 31 sunset provision in 20 terms of when they would be able to seek relief from the Court.

21 The first time they raised the issue about the racial
22 profiling was on November 30.

23 MR. MOORE: Judge --

24 MS. GROSSMAN: -- the first time they raised an issue
25 about another item concerning joint community forums was on

7clPdanC

1 November 30.

2 THE COURT: Which falls within the 30 days. But you
3 are saying out of the technicality, the reason that it is 4 important was because, that's important because you weren't in 5 the office at 7:03 on a Friday night and didn't see it until 6 Monday.

7 The city is saying it didn't have actual notice on 8 November 30, but on December 3.

9 MR. MOORE: We were before you in April, and we were 10 raising the issues about the fact that they hadn't produced the 11 database. And, you know, we didn't get that until October.

12 THE COURT: I know --

13 MR. MOORE: -- that sort of sidetracked us a little 14 bit. And I think, though, that now that we have had the 15 data --

16 THE COURT:: -- but that didn't relate to things like
17 not having proof of training, and proof of community forum,
18 which you didn't think was going on. There were other
19 complaints that you could have raised in time to get some real 20 rulings on violations or not.

21 I might have still said at the end of the day, with 22 respect to training, they undertook no obligation to report to 23 you, you would argue back, no, but they took on an obligation
24 to do it, how are we supposed to judge compliance if we can't 25 get discovery. But discovery is different than a reporting

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 requirement.

2 MR. MOORE: I guess it brings me to my other point
3 which if, in fact, the city is of the opinion that all they 4 have to do is have a written policy, and they have a written
5 policy, what harm is there to the city in agreeing to extend 6 this for two months, three months, whatever it may be, if in 7 fact, as they say, are all that it requires them to do is have 8 something on paper that says we won't engage --

9 THE COURT: -- you don't know if they have a written 10 policy?

11 MR. MOORE: I do know that they implemented a written 12 policy. There was -- I haven't looked at it in the last few 13 weeks. But I do believe there is a written policy.

14 My point is that if, in fact, all they are required to 15 do under this settlement agreement is to have a written policy, 16 what harm is there in extending this agreement for a couple of 17 months, for us to resolve these issues and decide, for 18 instance, decide whether we want to just put this thing to bed
19 and, you know, start another case. If that's what we want to 20 do.

21 If we believe that that evidence of racial profiling
22 is there, you make a very strong point about trying to put a 23 square peg in a round hole, whatever that might be. But my 24 point is, what harm would there be -- I guess the answer is,
25 it's a common-sense argument. It is not a lawyerly argument.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 That's the problem.

2 THE COURT: Unfortunately we all chose this
3 profession, and some days we ask yourselves why.

4 Lawyers have the right to stand on technicalities.
5 The Supreme Court issued some opinion last year that said, yes,
6 the federal Judge -- that -- the Supreme Court said you are 7 time barred, you have to file an appeal ten days after 8 judgement, telling your attorney you want an appeal is not
9 enough. You should have listened to that Federal Judge.

10 The consenting Justices were outraged, but there you
11 have it. The other justices thought it was a fine thing to say
12 it on the technicality. The District Judge told the prisoner
13 you have that time. A career prisoner should have known better
14 than a federal Judge. The law is full of technicalities.

15 Why doesn't the city agree to extend it? Because they 16 don't want to. And if they don't have to, they don't want to.

17 What am I going to do? Tell them, practically
18 speaking, he's right, why don't you give us all time to brief
19 this and decide this? They could say, that's very nice, but we 20 decline.

21 You want me to get it on the -- would you agree to 22 extend this two to three months? We can get a briefing
23 schedule.

24 MS. GROSSMAN: Your Honor, I am not authorized to 25 agree to that.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

1 MS. COSTELLO: I have one point on the training issue,
2 Exhibit 1 to our letter, the December 4 letter that I wrote to
4 bottom --

5 THE COURT: -- I got a problem, the November 30
6 letter --

7 MS. COSTELLO: -- no, I'm sorry, the letter that we 8 delivered to the Court last Friday.

9 THE COURT:: Oh, yes.

10 MS. COSTELLO: Exhibit 1 to that.

11 THE COURT:: Exhibit 1 is the November 30 letter.

12 MS. COSTELLO: Maybe it is Exhibit 2, your Honor.

13 THE COURT: Exhibit 2 is the February 16 letter.

14 MS. COSTELLO: There should be a September 4 letter,
15 your Honor.

17 MS. COSTELLO: On the next page we explain to the city
18 that we think they are not in compliance with the training
19 requirements, just as we thought they were not in compliance
20 with the auditing of the training requirements.

21 THE COURT: But you didn't bring it to my attention,
22 is all I am trying to say. Of course, now what you are saying
23 is you did satisfy the dispute resolution mechanism. Is that
24 your argument, that by the September 4 letter you did, in fact,
25 satisfy the dispute resolution requirement?

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 MR. MOORE: Yes.

2 MS. COSTELLO: As Ms. Grossman and I had conversations
3 in which we were attempting to see if the city would give us
4 some documentation showing that the training had occurred.

5 THE COURT: Ms. Grossman, did the plaintiff satisfy
6 the dispute resolution by raising the issue on September 4?

7 MS. GROSSMAN: On the training?

8 THE COURT: In writing.

9 MS. GROSSMAN: The one piece on the training, yes.
10 But when I mentioned that the issue about the racial profiling
11 was first -- first --

12 THE COURT: -- but we got lots of issues. Let's deal
13 with training.

14 So they satisfied the dispute --

15 MS. GROSSMAN: -- yes.

16 THE COURT: What flows from the fact that they said
17 the dispute resolution mechanism on the training point? And 18 you raised some kind of defense.

19 MS. GROSSMAN: I'm sorry, your Honor, were you
20 addressing me?

21 THE COURT: I said, what flows from the fact that they 22 satisfied the dispute resolution mechanism.

23 MS. GROSSMAN: Our response to that, your Honor, was 24 that they misinterpreted the agreement, that they are rewriting
25 the agreement.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

(212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 THE COURT: Meaning procedurally, if they satisfied
2 the dispute resolution mechanism by giving you 30 days, what
3 flows from that, they are allowed to come to court.

4 MS. GROSSMAN: Yes.

5 THE COURT: So they alluded to come to court on that
6 one because they satisfied the dispute -- and they want to say
7 because of, in their view, of the training requirement being
8 violated, that is a basis for this Court to extend supervision,
9 and/or compel specific performance.

10 MS. GROSSMAN: Your Honor, the agreement is very 11 specific. It permits specific performance. And then I would 12 submit, your Honor, that they have to provide sufficient notice
13 to the Court to enable all parties to perform. And to give 14 seven days. And to give notice on this schedule is not what I
15 believe is contemplated by the agreement.

16 THE COURT: Well, I don't know. They satisfied the 17 dispute resolution mechanism, we all agree with that, on this 18 issue, and they, then they have the right to come to court.
19 And they have come to court.

20 I can say, based on their complaint regarding 21 training, I need to have full briefings in order to give the 22 Court an appropriate amount of time to decide whether there has 23 been a violation. I have to extend the deadline to decide the 24 motion properly.

25 MS. GROSSMAN: We would submit, your Honor, that
SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 that's not the dispute -- that is not a remedy available under
2 the agreement.

3 THE COURT: The remedy you agreed to is, they can
4 bring a dispute to court after giving you 30 days notice.

5 MS. GROSSMAN: But there is no --

6 THE COURT: -- inherent power. I can't decide a
7 motion that's not briefed. It is timely, it was brought before
8 the expiration of this agreement, they satisfied the dispute
9 resolution mechanism, the Court has the power to operate its 10 own docket. I can't decide a motion, an important one, that's 11 not briefed.

12 Is there any other exhausted issue, so to speak,
13 besides the training one? Should we continue with the letter
14 since they agreed that you -- what's the next one?

15 MS. GROSSMAN: Your Honor, I would just add on the 16 training piece, there is no good-faith belief given. What we 17 just walked through of the verification that there was an 18 absence of language --

19 THE COURT: -- but Mr. Moore makes some practical
20 point. There is no point in the city agreeing to do something,
21 there is no way to find out whether they did comply. Otherwise
22 you have a right without a remedy. You have a meaningless
23 agreement.

24 That cannot be the intent of the parties to say, we 25 will provide training but ha, ha, if we don't, you can't find
SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 out and you can't take us to go task for it. That can't make
2 sense.

3 MS. GROSSMAN: Your Honor --

4 THE COURT: -- but I am going to run out of time and
5 patience shortly. I would like to move right past the training
6 to the next exhaustive claim. Is there another --

7 MS. GROSSMAN: -- may I just be heard once on the 8 training?

9 THE COURT: No.

10 MS. GROSSMAN: To talk -- we had negotiations on the 11 document being --

12 THE COURT: -- no.

13 MS. GROSSMAN: -- bank added to the agreement and we 14 rejected it --

15 THE COURT: -- no --

16 MS. GROSSMAN: -- the plaintiffs wrote --

17 THE COURT: -- no, I don't want to hear anymore about 18 training. I want to hear other issues that are ready for the 19 Court.

20 What other issues have you exhausted?

21 MS. COSTELLO: We are going to concede the other two 22 issues, they are minor. We think the training is the --

23 THE COURT: -- the city says they have a right to 24 stand on the technicality on the violation of the racial

25 profiling policy, you didn't give them the notice till December

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C. (212) 805-0300

7clPdanC

1 3, so you can't bring that one to court in time for the 2 stipulation of settlement to expire. So the only one that's 3 live is the training.

4 If that's all we have to do between now and the 31st,
5 maybe we can brief it and decide it. It is one issue not five,
6 not four, not six.

7 I still say, putting a square peg in a round hole and 8 all you have to do is bring a lawsuit, my interpretation of 9 that protective order is that you have the documents till the 10 end of January.

11 MR. FRANKLIN: Your Honor, can we take two minutes?

12 THE COURT: Please.

13 (Recess)

14 THE COURT: Mr. Moore.

15 MR. MOORE: Judge, after consulting with my 16 colleagues, I think we have come to a position that if we
17 have -- if the Court is willing to permit us to hold the data
18 that we have until the end of January, 30 days after the 19 expiration of this agreement, we would be willing to withdraw 20 this motion at this point. And engage in this process of 21 bringing another lawsuit or not.

22 THE COURT: I think I said it many times on this 23 record, that that's my interpretation of this agreement. And 24 that is the way I am ruling, that's what it said, 30 days after 25 the termination of this case, which to me it finally

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.

7clPdanC

1 terminates, termination December 31, '07, they remain
2 confidential. But that doesn't mean you can't use them.

3 MR. MOORE: To the extent that some of the materials
4 have already been made public, --

5 THE COURT: -- what's public is public. If you cite
6 to the Rand study, publicly, nobody can criticize you for that.
7 If they do, they weren't acting in good faith. If I can get
8 the Rand study on the Internet, it is public --

9 MR. MOORE: -- you can go to the NYPD website, your 10 Honor.

11 THE COURT: There you go, that's public. You can use
12 that. And as I said before, I would accept it as a related 13 case, which the plaintiff has the power to designate.

14 I think this current motion is withdrawn. Thank you.

15 ALL COUNSEL: Thank you, your Honor.

Rights and Wrongs

A judge takes on stop-and-frisk.

Jeffrey Toobin

May 27, 2013

I don't love trials," Judge Shira Scheindlin said recently. "They are not a good way to tell a story. They are not efficient. And they are often so tedious—you saw that today." Scheindlin was sitting at a conference table in her chambers in the Daniel Patrick Moynihan building, off Foley Square, in lower Manhattan, after a long day of presiding in Floyd v. City of New York, which is the latest legal challenge to the stop-and-frisk practices of the New York Police Department. "What I really like to do is write opinions," the Judge said. "There you get to do what you think is right, what you believe in. You're pushing the margins of the envelope, being willing to be creative."

It was after seven o'clock in the evening, and the courthouse was nearly empty. At sixty-six, Scheindlin is renowned for her work ethic and her demands on her staff. Her clerks work from 9 A.M. until 8 P.M. every weekday. They can get lunch at the courthouse cafeteria but must eat it in chambers. They are also expected to work six hours over the weekend. (They can choose which day.)

In her office, Scheindlin was relaxed and expansive, especially when she talked about her two children, a son who is a violist with the Metropolitan Opera orchestra and a daughter who is a political consultant and pollster in Israel. (Her husband, Dr. Stanley Friedman, is an associate dean at SUNY-Downstate Medical Center.) On the bench, though, she is unflaggingly rigorous. She listens to testimony, reads the transcript on her computer in real time, e-mails her clerks, and sips endless cups of Diet Coke. Lawyers who appear before her often describe her as opinionated and brusque. ("I've heard enough." "Move along." "I've ruled, counsel.")

The primary outlet for Scheindlin's judicial creativity has been an enduring battle she has fought with the N.Y.P.D. A federal judge since 1994, she has been hearing lawsuits against the police for more than a decade. In decision after decision, she has found that cops have lied, discriminated against people of color, and violated the rights of citizens. Now, in the midst of a mayoral race, with the Democratic candidates united in their opposition to the stop-and-frisk policies of the Bloomberg administration, the Floyd case represents Scheindlin's greatest chance yet to rewrite the rules of engagement between the city's police and its people. David Floyd, the lead plaintiff, is an African-American medical student who had been stopped and searched twice. The core allegation in the case is that the N.Y.P.D. is systematically violating the rights of its citizens with unlawful stop-and-frisks, particularly by targeting minorities. The questions before Scheindlin are profound. Crime has declined in New York in recent years, as it has in other cities around the country. But why? And at what cost to the civil liberties of its people? Has New York City conducted a long-term, racially motivated campaign to deprive thousands of its citizens of their constitutional rights? Or, as Mayor Bloomberg and others maintain, has the city created one of the great law-enforcement success stories in recent American history?

The concept behind stop-and-frisk, which is sometimes also called “stop, question, and frisk,” is a simple and venerable one. Police officers may arrest a suspect only if they have probable cause to believe that he committed a crime. What can they do if they suspect that someone is involved in criminal activity but lack sufficient grounds to make an arrest? The Supreme Court addressed the subject in Terry v. Ohio, in 1968. According to Chief Justice Earl Warren’s opinion, a stop is permissible only when “a police officer observes unusual conduct which leads him reasonably to conclude in light of his experience that criminal activity may be afoot.” In other words, the level of certainty needed for an officer to make such a stop is less than probable cause; the standard is often described as “reasonable suspicion.” According to the Terry decision, the judgment by the officer must be made on the basis of “specific reasonable inferences” from the evidence, not “inarticulate hunches.” By and large, this remains the law today. Stop-and-frisk encounters are also known as “Terry stops.”

“Stop, question, and frisk has been around forever,” William Bratton, a former police commissioner in Boston, New York, and Los Angeles, told me. “It’s a basic tool. It’s the most fundamental practice in American policing. It is done every day, probably by every city force in America. If the police are not doing it, they are probably not doing their job.” Bratton served as Mayor Rudolph Giuliani’s first commissioner of the N.Y.P.D., from 1994 to 1996, and is widely credited with changing the orientation of the police from responding to crime to preventing it.

Through much of the second half of the twentieth century, crime and disorder, in forms ranging from graffiti to murder to a crack epidemic, plagued New York. The police appeared powerless to address these scourges. “Around 1960, New York City basically stopped policing,” Bratton told me. “The police were no longer engaged in controlling behavior in the streets. We changed that. If people are drinking cans of beer on the corner, you stop that behavior. If somebody is urinating against a building, or if you suspect somebody is casing a building for a burglary, you stop them. Of course police should be doing that. You make the streets safe, and, besides, a lot of these people committing these minor crimes turn out to have warrants out against them for more serious things.” The approach is known as Broken Windows, after a 1982 article in the Atlantic by James Q. Wilson and George L. Kelling. Bratton’s interpretation of the Broken Windows approach called for vigorous police enforcement of minor crimes like fare-beating and intrusive panhandling as a tool to preserve public order and, at the same time, to catch criminals. In addition, the N.Y.P.D. under Bratton began to make extensive use of data to identify crime-prone areas and focus resources on them—an approach sometimes called “hot-spot policing.” Along the way, especially in high-crime neighborhoods, cops stopped people not just in the act of committing minor crimes but also for suspicious behavior.

Stop-and-frisk—indeed, aggressive policing generally—presents significant challenges for judges. Months, or even years, after a confrontation between a cop and a suspect, the judge must determine if the stop was legal and thus whether the evidence gathered can be used in court or should be suppressed. “Most judges are reluctant to grant suppression motions,” Erin Murphy, a professor at the New York University School of Law, said. “It’s hard for judges to look a police officer in the eye and say he didn’t follow the law. And of course it’s only defendants who look guilty who file suppression motions. It’s every judge’s worst nightmare that a released defendant will show up in the newspaper the next day for committing some horrible crime. If you suppress evidence, you are making it hard or impossible to prosecute a guilty person. That’s a really difficult emotional and political decision for a judge to make.”

The matter of Antonio Fernandez presented such a dilemma for Judge Scheindlin. On May 12, 1995, police received a 911 call reporting a gang meeting in progress at a small park in the Bronx. The caller said that one member, a Hispanic man wearing a white-and-black jacket, had a gun. The officers who responded found about fifty or sixty men, all Hispanic, milling around. The police frisked one man, who had no contraband. Then they followed a group of three or four men who had been standing to the side of the main group. One of them was Fernandez, who was stopped, frisked, and found to have a small amount of marijuana. At the station house, he was frisked again, and police said that he had a fully loaded .38-calibre revolver hidden in his crotch.

Fernandez was charged with illegal possession of a handgun, and the case was assigned to Scheindlin, who was in her early days on the federal bench. Fernandez argued that the Terry stop was illegal, and that the gun should be suppressed as illegally obtained evidence. Scheindlin agreed, writing in an opinion that, “based on the facts presented here, the police did not have reasonable suspicion to stop Defendant and his companions.” In part, Scheindlin said, the stop-and-frisk was illegitimate, because the anonymous tip was too vague to lead to Fernandez, but her opinion reflected a disbelief in the officers’ testimony. According to the officers, Fernandez’s first frisk produced a small amount of marijuana, but the second yielded a large handgun. As Scheindlin wrote, “It is extremely difficult to believe that the same officer could have missed a bulky .38 caliber revolver hidden in Defendant’s pants.”

The case might have passed without notice, but Antonio Fernandez was not an ordinary defendant. He was better known as King Tone, the leader of the Latin Kings, one of the most notorious drug gangs in the United States, and he was being charged as part of a huge crackdown on the group by the United States Attorney’s office for the Southern District of New York. “Scheindlin is one of the very few judges who would have had the guts to toss out a case like that one,” a former prosecutor familiar with the case said. (Three years later, Fernandez was prosecuted for heroin and cocaine trafficking and sentenced, by a different judge, to twelve years.) Scheindlin’s ruling in the Fernandez case set a template for her handling of criminal cases. As one of her former law clerks put it, “What you have to remember about the Judge is that she thinks cops lie.”

According to a study prepared by the Mayor’s office, Scheindlin suppresses evidence on the basis of illegal police searches far more than any of her colleagues—twice as often as the second-place judge. This may mean that Scheindlin is uniquely courageous—or that she is uniquely biased against cops. (Scheindlin has said that the study is misleading, because it reflects only her written opinions, rather than bench rulings, in which she almost invariably rejects motions to suppress.) Still, she embraces her maverick status. Many judges in the Southern District previously worked as prosecutors in the U.S. Attorney's office there, but she was not among them. "Too many judges, especially because so many of our judges come out of that office, become government judges," Scheindlin told me. "I don't think I'm the favorite of the U.S. Attorney's office for the Southern District. Because I'm independent. I believe in the Constitution. I believe in the Bill of Rights. These issues come up, and I take them quite seriously. I'm not afraid to rule against the government."

http://www.newyorker.com/reporting/2013/05/27/130527fa_fact_toobin?

Scheindlin grew up in Detroit. Her mother was a schoolteacher, and her father, who emigrated from the Soviet Union, ran a Jewish civic organization. "We were a political family," she told me. "My father was the official Jew for many committees in the state." For a time, the family lived in a house once owned by a brother of Walter Reuther, the United Auto Workers labor leader. "The house had a bullet hole, from where someone had taken a shot at him," she said. "It was a tough town."

At the University of Michigan, Scheindlin majored in Chinese history, then continued her studies for seven years at Columbia. She never received her doctorate. "The language defeated me," she said. "The prospect of reading original documents in Chinese was just too difficult." Scheindlin drifted into law school, graduating from Cornell in 1975. She spent her final year of law school at Columbia, where she took a class with Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who became a mentor. Ginsburg introduced her to the legal side of the women's-rights movement, and, while still a student, Scheindlin played a role in a case that brought equal pay to female academics at the City University of New York.

For the next two decades, Scheindlin did a little bit of everything in the law. She was in private practice, a federal prosecutor in Brooklyn, general counsel to the New York City Department of Investigation, and a magistrate (a lower-level federal judge), also in Brooklyn. In 1994, at the recommendation of Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who had been encouraged by Ginsburg, President Clinton nominated Scheindlin to the federal bench in Manhattan. Her professional roots in Brooklyn, which is known as the Eastern District of New York, separated her from the start from the clubby world of the Southern District.

A defining event of Scheindlin's tenure as a federal judge took place on February 4, 1999. On that day, four plainclothes officers shot and killed Amadou Diallo, an unarmed African immigrant, who was in the vestibule of his apartment building, in the Soundview section of the Bronx. (The officers, who thought Diallo was reaching for a gun, were charged with manslaughter. They were acquitted by a jury in Albany, where the case had been moved because of pretrial publicity in the Bronx.) The Diallo case suggested a dark side of Giuliani-era policing. The same aggressiveness that led New York cops to arrest minor offenders could turn, in certain circumstances, into a predatory approach to non-offenders, especially racial minorities. Crime rates (for whatever reason) had fallen dramatically during the Giuliani administration, but the Diallo case raised concerns about the N.Y.P.D.'s new tactics. "The idea behind proactive policing was to get guns off the street, which was fine as far as it went, but what it meant on the street was the cops tossed every young black man that they saw," Jonathan Moore, a veteran civil-rights lawyer, said. "That's what led to Diallo."

http://www.newyorker.com/reporting/2013/05/27/130527fa_fact_toobin?

In response to Diallo's death, Moore and the Center for Constitutional Rights, a legal-advocacy group, filed the first class-action lawsuit challenging the city's stop-and-frisk policies. The case, Daniels v. City of New York (Kelvin Daniels was the lead plaintiff), was randomly assigned to Judge Scheindlin, and years of legal skirmishing followed. The parties settled in 2004. The city agreed to establish a written policy governing its stop-and-frisk practices and to improve the training of officers in conducting legal Terry stops.

In retrospect, though, the most important part of the Daniels settlement may have involved record-keeping. The city agreed to create a kind of checklist, which police officers would complete each time they conducted a stop-and-frisk. During the next decade, the police filled out more than four million of these forms, which served as indispensable evidence for the Center for Constitutional Rights and others in lawsuits against the city.

Scheindlin has a bright and airy courtroom, one floor below her chambers, and the Floyd trial, now in its third month, has settled into a routine. In jury trials, judges avoid signalling their views, so as not to influence the jurors; but in bench trials there's less reason for judges to be reticent. By this point, Judge Scheindlin's views seem etched on the faces of the lawyers before her. Moore and his colleagues bound in and greet the Judge with confident half-smiles; the team from the city's law department already look like disaster survivors, just trying to hang on. Moore and his team linger after court, chatting with spectators; the city's lawyers, led by Brenda Cooke, scurry for the door, avoiding eye contact. (Closing statements are expected this week; Scheindlin will probably render her decision within sixty days.)

The plaintiffs' key witness was Jeffrey Fagan, a criminologist and statistician, and a professor of law at Columbia, who has spent much of the past decade scrutinizing the city's vast database of stop-and-frisk reports. The stop-and-frisk form, known as the UF-250, contains boxes for police officers to check to explain why a suspect was stopped. Some of the boxes refer to specific behavior: a suspicious bulge in clothing, or a refusal to comply with an officer's directions. More than half of the four million UF-250 forms included checks in the box labelled "Furtive movements." In his report, Fagan concluded that the furtive-movement box, without more evidence, suggested an unconstitutional Terry stop—that is, one not supported by reasonable suspicion of a crime. According to an algorithm that Fagan devised, eighty-two per cent of the stops were justifiable, twelve per cent were ambiguous, and six per cent appeared to be unjustified. Projecting that ratio over a decade, Fagan concluded that the N.Y.P.D. had made more than two hundred and sixty thousand illegal stop-and-frisks.

The plaintiffs have emphasized that only six per cent of stops led to arrests, just two per cent yielded seizures of contraband, and only a tenth of one per cent led to seizures of guns. According to Moore, "What this means is that the stops are unjustified more than ninety per cent of the time." Moreover, the plaintiffs used Fagan's findings to support a claim that the police engaged in racial discrimination. According to Fagan's analysis, N.Y.P.D. stop-and-frisks are significantly more frequent for black and Hispanic residents—constituting eighty-four per cent of the stops—than they are for white residents, even after adjusting for local crime rates, the racial composition of the local population, and other social and economic factors. "Statistics is a big part of how we are proving racial discrimination by the police," Darius Charney, who is a co-lead counsel, with Moore, in the Floyd case, said. "We don't need to find blatant racial animus. It doesn't have to be motivated by hatred of black or Hispanic people. We are looking at evidence of stereotypical thinking. We're looking for cops using race as a factor to make these decisions in a law-enforcement context. It's using race as a proxy for crime."

In public, police officials have a clear answer to these accusations. "We have had tremendous success," Raymond Kelly, the police commissioner since 2002, told me. "Crime is down, and stop-and-frisk is an important reason why." Civil libertarians say that other factors (such as changing inner-city demographics and the end of the crack epidemic) are involved, and dispute any clear correlation between more aggressive police behavior and the falloff in crime. What is indisputable is that since Bloomberg took office, in 2002, murders have dropped twenty-eight per cent, to four hundred and nineteen in 2012, the lowest number since the city began keeping records, in 1963. Even compared with other cities where crime has also declined, New York has experienced dramatic changes. Since 2002, major crimes across the country have declined fourteen per cent; in New York, they have declined thirty-four per cent. The contrast is even more striking between New York and other big cities. If New York had Detroit's murder rate last year, there would have been forty-five hundred murders in the city—more than ten times the actual number.

Lawyers for the city tried to make the argument before Scheindlin about the effectiveness of stop-and-frisk, but she shut them down before they had the chance. In order to rebut Fagan's analysis of the UF-250 forms, they sought the testimony of Dennis Smith, a professor of public policy at New York University who is an expert on police management. In particular, the city lawyers wanted Smith to testify about his view that the stop-and-frisk policy was an important factor in what they termed "the historic crime decline achieved by New York City."

In a pretrial ruling, Scheindlin excluded much of Smith's proposed testimony. She said that "permitting the parties to delve into the question of whether the stop-and-frisk program actually reduces crime would risk turning the trial into a policy debate over the wisdom of the program rather than a judicial proceeding that assesses plaintiffs' constitutional claims." Still, as the trial has unfolded, city lawyers have continued to argue that stop-and-frisk has been a success—to Scheindlin's mounting irritation. When Brenda Cooke, the city's lead attorney, who was cross-examining Fagan, tried to make that point, Scheindlin cut her off.

"I got to put a stop to this," the Judge said. "It is not a good use of my time. For one thing, I've said repeatedly that one issue that is not present here is the effectiveness of this policy, because that's not for this court. This court is only here to judge the constitutionality. . . . We could stop giving Miranda warnings. That would probably be exciting for reducing crimes. But we don't allow that. So there are a number of things that might reduce crime, but they're unconstitutional. This court is only concerned with the Constitution, not with the effectiveness of the policy. I've tried and tried to explain that. This is my third or fourth try."

Even then, the city's witnesses persisted in defending stop-and-frisk as a sure means to reduce crime. In a way, the entire conflict in the case came down to a single exchange between Moore and Joseph J. Esposito, who had just stepped down, after thirteen years, as the chief of department in the N.Y.P.D., the highest-ranked uniformed officer in the force. Chief Espo, as he is known, was a renowned figure in the N.Y.P.D., and his demeanor on the stand suggested that he was more accustomed to giving orders than to answering questions. Esposito poorly concealed his contempt as Moore, shambling but relentless, pursued him about the propriety of stop-and-frisk. Moore noted that the number of stop-and-frisks had increased from approximately ninety-seven thousand, in 2002, to almost six hundred and eighty-five thousand, in 2011.

“So that increase is all on your watch, correct?” Moore asked.

“Yes, it is,” Esposito said, plainly seething. After a slight pause, he volunteered, eyes flashing, “As is the forty-per-cent decrease in crime during my time—as is the eighty-per-cent decrease in the last twenty years.”

In the Southern District, plaintiffs in civil cases can designate new cases as related to old ones and thus guarantee that the same judge presides. Ever since the Daniels case, civil-rights and civil-liberties groups have continued to challenge the stop-and-frisk policies of the N.Y.P.D. Each time, the plaintiffs have made sure that the cases went before Judge Scheindlin, who currently has three such class actions on her docket. The Floyd case challenges the practice citywide; Davis v. City of New York, which will go to trial later this year, involves stops-at city-owned housing projects; and Ligon v. City of New York, which is farthest along in the process, concerns searches at privately owned properties around the city.

The Ligon case was initiated by the Bronx Defenders, a nonprofit organization that represents indigent defendants in the borough. The lawsuit was based on the experience of, among others, Charles Bradley, a fifty-year-old security guard from the South Bronx who went to visit his fiancée at her apartment building, in the Parkchester neighborhood, on May 3, 2011. When he went upstairs, she didn’t answer her doorbell at first—she is deaf in one ear—so Bradley went downstairs to wait. “An officer got out of an unmarked van and came up to me,” Bradley recalled. “I just accommodated the officer to the best of my ability, and, in turn, what happened was, he went into my pockets. . . . There was nothing in my pockets except my house keys, my cell phone, my wallet. The thing about it that was so appalling was that I had spent my last dollar to see my loved one. And then he said, ‘Fuck that, you’re going in.’ ” Bradley was arrested for trespassing, a misdemeanor, and strip-searched.

At the local precinct, Bradley was given a Desk Appearance Ticket, a common first step in the legal process for minor offenses in New York City. He was instructed to appear in criminal court on July 19th, but he faced a more immediate problem. “There was a domino effect from being arrested,” Bradley said. The arrest would be reported to a New York State licensing agency for security guards, and that might mean the loss of Bradley’s job. “I need a license to be a security guard, and I would have lost it if they pressed charges,” he said. “If I lose my license, I lose my income. I could have been put into homelessness for all this.”

Bradley took the ticket to the offices of the Defenders, who have pioneered what they call “holistic defense,” a method based on recognizing that, for criminal defendants like Bradley, deportation, eviction, or the loss of parental rights may be more ruinous than conviction or jail. Bradley met with two lawyers—an employment specialist and a criminal-defense attorney. “Charles was freaking out,” Molly Kovel, the employment lawyer, said. “We had seen it before. Many of our clients are security guards or cabdrivers, and both are licensed by the government. For a lot of minor crimes, the bigger threat to their lives is losing their jobs, rather than getting convicted.” Kovel kept the licensing authorities at bay while a colleague, Cara Suvall, dealt with the criminal case. "I had the problem of how to prove his innocence," Suvall said. "So we went and got a notarized letter from his fiancée saying that he really was visiting her. I took it to the district attorney, and they agreed to drop the charges."

Still, the experience of Bradley and others prompted the Bronx Defenders to file a class-action suit against the city. The case focussed on the N.Y.P.D.'s Operation Clean Halls program, through which private landlords give the police advance permission to patrol their property. This led to Ligon v. City of New York, in which the Defenders were joined by the New York Civil Liberties Union, the public-interest group Latino Justice, and the law firm of Shearman & Sterling. (Jaenon Ligon, the lead plaintiff in that class action, had also claimed to be the victim of an unlawful stop-and-frisk.) They charged that the police were using Operation Clean Halls to conduct unconstitutional stop-and-frisk searches of innocent citizens like Bradley.

At a hearing in October, 2012, Scheindlin listened to testimony from both Bradley and Miguel Santiago, the officer who placed the cuffs on him. Santiago testified that Bradley was in a "drug-prone location" in a high-crime neighborhood and was "suspiciously walking back and forth" outside the building. Santiago said that he approached Bradley by saying, "Excuse me, sir, could you come over here?" and that Bradley could not tell him his girlfriend's name or produce any identification. But Judge Scheindlin noted that Santiago's paperwork contradicted his account in several ways—he had written, for example, that he approached Bradley inside the building.

In a hundred-and-fifty-seven-page opinion, handed down on January 8th this year, Scheindlin gave the Defenders a resounding victory. "Officer Santiago claimed that he was able to see Bradley's suspicious behavior even though he was inside a police van parked across the street, twenty or thirty feet from the door, separated from Bradley not only by the street but by the windows of the front door, a vestibule, the windows of an inner door, and the hallway," Judge Scheindlin observed. "I find Bradley's account credible." She was especially moved by Bradley's story. "If an unjustified stop happens to lead to an unjustified arrest for trespassing, as it did in Charles Bradley's case, not every overburdened public defender will have the wherewithal to obtain a notarized letter from the defendant's host explaining that the defendant was invited, as Bronx Defender Cara Suvall did on behalf of Bradley," she wrote. "When considering the relative hardships faced by the parties, it is important to consider the potentially dire and long-lasting consequences that can follow from unconstitutional stops." Scheindlin concluded that a "very large number of constitutional violations took place" as a result of Operation Clean Halls.

Scheindlin had found the city liable in the Ligon case, but what was the remedy? Here the Judge sprang a surprise. She wrote that she was going to decide the city's punishment in the Ligon case (which the city had already lost) at the end of the Floyd trial (which had not even taken place). In other words, it looked as though Scheindlin were scheduling her remedies hearing as if she had already ruled against the city in Floyd. In a footnote, Scheindlin added, "I emphasize that this ruling should in no way be taken to indicate that I have already concluded that plaintiffs will prevail in Floyd." But the city lawyers in the Floyd case are skeptical that the Judge's mind is open. "It's like she has scheduled our sentencing before she's even found us guilty," one said.

Politically, the verdict on stop-and-frisk seems already clear. The Democratic mayoral candidates running to succeed Michael Bloomberg all criticize stop-and-frisk, differing only in the intensity of their complaints. Christine Quinn, the City Council speaker, said recently, at Barnard College, “I want to leave it as a tool in police officers’ toolboxes,” but she noted, “We need to put an infrastructure of reform around stop-and-frisk.” Bill de Blasio, the public advocate, said at a mayoral forum, “We need to send a message to every young man of color that they are beloved, they are valuable, they are our future. You can’t do that if you’re constantly treating people as suspects.” John Liu, the comptroller, has gone even further. “Stop-and-frisk doesn’t have to be amended, it has to be ended,” he said at the forum.

In response, Bloomberg took the unusual step last month of giving a speech to the leadership of the N.Y.P.D. in which he both celebrated his record in reducing crime and addressed the allegations in the Floyd case. “As the ongoing federal court case is now demonstrating for any objective observer to see,” the Mayor said, “the N.Y.P.D. conducts stops based on seeing something suspicious, or witnesses’ descriptions of suspects, not on any preconceived notions, or on demographic data that would have you stopping old women as often as you stop young men.” Commissioner Kelly, for his part, is dismissive of the mayoral candidates’ criticism. “This is just pandering. This is what goes on in New York politics,” he told me. “They try and get as far left as they can for the primary, where it’s just a tiny number of people who are voting. Then the challenge is to get to the center for the general election. That’s all that’s going on here.”

In the courtroom, before Judge Scheindlin, the city is attempting to put on a defense. The lawyers are pushing back on the plaintiffs’ most incendiary claim—that the stop-and-frisk policy has been applied in a racially discriminatory manner. “It’s close to a perfect correlation between who is committing crime and who is being stopped,” Celeste Koeleveld, the deputy Corporation Counsel who is supervising the defense, said. “That’s true in minority neighborhoods, and also in predominantly white areas, like Staten Island.” She noted that more than half of the N.Y.P.D. consists of racial minorities. Kelly goes further, asserting that stop-and-frisk protects, rather than oppresses, the African-American community. In a speech last month before Al Sharpton’s National Action Network, Kelly said, “African-Americans, who represent twenty-three per cent of the city’s population, made up sixty-four per cent of the murder victims and seventy-one per cent of the shooting victims in this city last year.” He added, “African-American men between the ages of sixteen and thirty-seven, who are just four per cent of the city’s population, comprise forty per cent of those murdered citywide; eighty-two per cent of these young men were killed with a firearm. As a city, as a society, we cannot stand idly by in the face of these facts.” He said, “I believe that this tactic is lifesaving,” and, referring to Terry v. Ohio, he added, “It is also lawful and constitutional as upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1968.”

Nevertheless, it appears that public criticism—and Scheindlin’s rulings—has already changed the behavior of the police. In March, just as the Floyd trial was beginning, the N.Y.P.D. revised its instructions to officers in filling out the stop-and-frisk reports, demanding that they provide narrative details on their reasons for the confrontations. More significant, perhaps, in the first quarter of this year the number of police stops dropped by fifty-one per cent.

In both the Floyd and the Ligon cases, the plaintiffs are asking for Scheindlin to appoint an independent monitor, to make sure that the police comply with the Constitution. They want the Judge to impose a sort of receivership on the police, creating a dual internal authority as a check on the existing leadership. As a model, the plaintiffs’ lawyers cite a case in Cincinnati a decade ago, in which the city agreed to fund an independent monitor who filed regular reports on the local cops' compliance with the law. (Bloomberg called this notion a recipe for chaos.) The idea of the independent monitor, like the lawsuits themselves, is rooted in the hope that a single judge can diagnose a complex problem and reform a huge organization like the New York Police Department based on the imperfect medium of trial testimony. Scheindlin's dedication to protecting citizens' rights is beyond question; it is less clear that she has the wisdom, or even the ability, to impose her vision in the real world of New York.

Scheindlin's confidence in her understanding of the Constitution remains unshaken. Back in her chambers, after a long day of testimony from a plaintiff's expert on police procedures, Scheindlin talked about another celebrated case of hers. Shortly after the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, investigators found the name and phone number of Osama Awadallah on a scrap of paper in a car rented by one of the hijackers. On September 21, 2001, F.B.I. agents in California arrested Awadallah. He was not charged with any crime but was held as a material witness. On October 10th, he testified before a grand jury in New York that he was acquainted with one of the hijackers but denied knowing another who lived in the San Diego area. He was indicted for perjury, but on April 20, 2002, before the trial had even begun, Scheindlin threw out the case against him.

In a pair of lengthy opinions, Scheindlin said that the government had violated the material-witness law, by holding Awadallah too long and under unduly harsh conditions. She quoted the famous Supreme Court case of Ex Parte Milligan, in 1866: "The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances." The Court of Appeals reversed Scheindlin's ruling and ordered her to bring Awadallah to trial. The trial ended in a hung jury; in a second trial, he was acquitted.

"That case was just an enormously satisfying experience," Scheindlin told me. "What I did was gutsy, because it was so close to 9/11. For me to suppress that evidence stunned people, because there was no question that he did know the hijackers. You saw the world changing in how each jury saw the case. The first jury was eleven-to-one to convict. But by the time of the second trial the Bush policies were unpopular, and he was acquitted. That was a vindication."

Each day, before Scheindlin goes to court, the last thing she sees in her chambers is a framed copy of an article she co-wrote with Brian Lehman, a former law clerk, in the New York Law Journal. Headlined "ONE DAY IN SEPTEMBER," and published in September of 2006, it was, like many stories published around that time, a commemoration of an anniversary. "It was a day in September that changed America forever," she wrote. But her story wasn't about September 11, 2001. It was about September 25, 1789, the day that Congress passed the Bill of Rights. Thanks to that document, the authors wrote, "If a judge decides that a defendant's rights have been violated and the case is dismissed, a remarkable thing happens: the government bows to the rule of law." ♦

Stop-and-Frisk Judge Relishes Her Independence

Mark Hamblett

May 20, 2013

The judge presiding over one of the most politically charged cases in recent New York City history says her 20 years on the bench have taught her to "appreciate more than ever the words 'judicial independence.'"

Shira Scheindlin, in a recent interview during the nine-week bench trial over the constitutionality of the New York City Police Department's anti-crime stop, question and frisk policies, said there are too many judges who don't want to take chances and deliver controversial rulings.

"They are fearful or they want a promotion or whatever it is, they don't exercise the independence they should have. State court judges of course face re-election, which is a terrible thing, but federal judges, who are appointed for life, don't appreciate how much independence they have—many of them are a little cautious, more cautious than they should be."

Few court observers would describe Scheindlin as cautious and the judge spoke freely when she sat down recently with the Law Journal to discuss some of her prior decisions and her views on being a federal judge. The only subject off the table was the ongoing trial, expected to wrap up on May 20 with closing arguments.

The judge, who already has made some rulings critical of the city for stop-and-frisk, has not been reluctant to make controversial decisions in the realm of civil liberties and constitutional law that have drawn the ire of police and prosecutors.

"I do think judges have a duty to protect individual rights because that's what the Bill of Rights is all about," she said. "It's the responsibility of the judiciary to protect those rights granted by our Founders. Now, does that make me an activist? No. Some people have said I'm conservative because I go back to what the Founders wrote and what they meant. I see it as abiding by my constitutional duty and our oath."

Among her other matters, Scheindlin (See Profile) has issued a series of groundbreaking opinions on e-discovery in Zubulake v. UBS Warburg, which she regards as her most significant case. (See, for example, NYLJ, May 13, 2003, and July 25, 2003).

She has presided over multi-district litigation on conflicts of interest at investment banks in initial public offerings, and has presided over the trials of mobster John Gotti Jr. and Police Officer Francis Livoti in the use of a deadly chokehold on Anthony Baez.

<http://www.newyorklawjournal.com/PubArticleNY.jsp?id=1202600625151&slreturn=20131007151207>

Scheidlin has held parts of New York's anti-harassment statute unconstitutional; found police in contempt for continuing to enforce a law against loitering for the purposes of begging for money or cruising for sex that had long been ruled unconstitutional; held the National Football League was violating the antitrust laws by preventing underclassman Maurice Clarett from participating in the league draft (later reversed); and compelled the Metropolitan Transportation Authority to reinstate subway advertising that mocked Mayor Rudolph Giuliani.

"What I've learned is do what you think is right, follow the law, do what you think you can do," she said. "Sometimes there is no precedent that constrains you and you can really strike out and write what you think is the right answer."

Scheidlin, 66, has earned a reputation as a hard-working judge and has kept up a full docket since taking senior status last year. She takes an average of 15 new cases a month and has a pending caseload of 132, not including related cases in multidistrict litigation. Her workload is in the upper half of senior judges in the district.

She sets a quick pace in her courtroom, with little tolerance for lawyers who obfuscate or belabor a point. She often asks questions herself when things slow down, although she said, "I don't think I've committed the sin of taking over trials."

"She is a judge who runs a very, very strong courtroom and has a clear idea of how she wants to do it," said one veteran Southern District practitioner.

"I think sometimes people can be critical of her because she can sometimes be sharp to litigants, put people down and be critical. But from my experience, when she comes on the bench, she's prepared, she has strong views and she has the courage of her convictions," he added. "Her ideas can sometimes be idiosyncratic. She's not afraid to think independently."

Scheidlin "runs a very orderly courtroom, dignified, and as a jurist she's not only smart but she's creative," said Robert Swift of Kohn Swift & Graf in Philadelphia, who has appeared before her. "She asks good questions and is polite to counsel, but, by the same token, she doesn't let counsel argue silly motions or make silly requests—she's well in control of her courtroom. She's certainly been reversed, but that's also indicative of a judge being certain of what the law should be—not just what it is."

Like other judges, Scheindlin said she expects lawyers who appear before her to be well prepared.

"They need to be familiar with the facts and the law on the spot and not say, 'Oh sorry, I have to go look that up, or 'I'm sorry, I have to ask a colleague,'" she said.

Unusual Path to the Law

Scheidlin was born in Washington, D.C., raised in Detroit, and educated at the University of Michigan, Columbia University and Cornell Law School.

<http://www.newyorklawjournal.com/PubArticleNY.jsp?id=1202600625151&slreturn=20131007151207>

She was working at Columbia as a graduate student in Far Eastern studies, but she said the language requirements were so rigorous—years of Chinese and Japanese included—"that I knew I would never finish my dissertation. So I said, 'What's next?'

"I really didn't know much about the law but I knew it offered a broad education that gives you lots of possibilities of what you might do with it afterward," she said.

"I think at that point I thought I was going to be doing divorces and house closings and DWIs," she said. "I thought I'd be a local town lawyer married to a professor on the campus."

After graduating from Cornell in 1975, she spent a year at Stroock & Stroock & Lavan, then clerked for Southern District Judge Charles Brieant and was hired by David Trager, who was then the U.S. attorney in the Eastern District. She rose from general prosecutions to handling political corruption cases before being named deputy chief of the Economic Crimes Unit while working as Trager's administrative assistant U.S. attorney.

Scheidlin counts Trager, along with Brieant and Eastern District Judge Jack Weinstein, as mentors.

Trager, she said, "was funny, he would speak in the imperative—you will get a clerkship, you will apply to be a magistrate."

She spent a year as general counsel at the New York City Department of Education and then returned to the Eastern District as a magistrate judge from 1982 to 1986, where she was also appointed as special master by Weinstein in the Agent Orange cases and litigation over asbestos.

Scheidlin returned to private practice in 1986 as a partner with Budd, Lerner, Gross, Rosenbaum, Greenberg & Sade and then Herzfeld & Rubin, where she worked as a commercial litigator until she was named a federal judge by President Bill Clinton in 1994, part of a wave of new judges who sometimes refer to themselves as the "Class of '94."

It is rare for magistrates to be promoted to Article III judgeships, and Scheindlin said her experience as a special master and magistrate—the first woman magistrate judge or district judge in the Eastern District—helped her hit the ground running when she took the bench in Manhattan.

"I just took that bench and I knew what I was doing," she said. "And I got feedback right away like, 'Boy you look like you've been doing this forever' and I would make a joke, 'Well, that's because I have.'"

She added, "I was incredibly fortunate—it is not easy for those who have not had any judicial experience."

Scheidlin said she never had any interest in moving to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit because cases are built at the district court level.

District judges "have a much more exciting job than the Court of Appeals, because we shape the case in the first instance. We shape the issue—the case comes in the door and we are the first judge on the line, with the first crack at giving an answer and shaping a ruling, shaping the whole future of that case, right?

"The Court of Appeals has to use what we've done—we have the tough job—all they can do is review it and say 'You got it right or you got it wrong.'"

Scheidlin said the problem with the appellate court is that "there you've got to negotiate and get votes and there's three of you and you can end up in dissent when you really don't want to. To me, this is the best of all worlds."

One case where the circuit said Scheindlin "got it wrong" was an opinion she remains proud of—her ruling that the government had abused the material witness statute by detaining Osama Awadallah in the 9/11 investigation and then prosecuting him for perjury. Awadallah had known two of the 9/11 hijackers in California (NYLJ, April 30, 2002).

Scheidlin dismissed the charges, calling it a "perjury trap" and holding the material witness statute was intended to be used only for trial witnesses, not people being interviewed in connection with an investigation.

The Second Circuit reversed and sent it back for trial (NYLJ, Nov. 10, 2003). The first jury hung 11 to 1 for conviction. The second, the judge recalled, "was 12-zip for acquittal."

"What happened in between?" Scheindlin asked. "It was exactly the same evidence, the same lawyers, and it was word for word the same trial record. What happened is that, it was later in the Bush administration and his policies were no longer as popular and people had pulled back...and were now looking at some of the consequences of the event that they didn't really like."

But the judge also said that the jury in the second trial was subjected to a "much stronger voir dire."

"The second questionnaire worked much harder to probe bias—'did you know anybody even indirectly, who was injured that day?'"

"We know that the first jury was in tears, people were crying, telling about their neighbor who had lost a son, which was not at all the point of the prosecution."

'Judges Are Human Beings'

Scheidlin's ruling in the Awadallah case drew criticism that she said found hard to take.

"Judges are human beings and it always hurts to be attacked when you can't defend yourself—that's a very painful thing," she said. "Over the years I have read editorials such as the famous 'Osama's Best Friend' after the Awadallah decision, it was hurtful.

"I would have liked to have been able to explain the decision so that the public understood it so I was not wrongly attacked but a judge doesn't have that ability," she said. "In recent years the bar associations have really stepped up to the plate and tried to defend judges, not on the merits of their decisions but by explaining their job, that the judge is a neutral and does the best they can.

To attack them personally when it's not a matter of dishonesty, just disagreement, is a terrible thing."

With her involvement in the stop-and-frisk litigation Scheindlin has had to cope with sharp criticism from city officials like Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly, who has accused her of being in the thrall of a few civil rights lawyers.

The New York County Lawyers' Association wrote to the New York Daily News on May 15 to protest an article reporting that an "internal report" by the mayor's office purporting to show that Scheindlin is biased against law enforcement because she has ruled against the police in nine of 15 written search-and-seizure opinions she has issued since 1994.

In its letter, NYCLA argued that the report was misleading because it did not consider her suppression decisions from the bench. Moreover, NYCLA wrote, "Judges are not supposed to grade on the curve. They are supposed to decide cases on their merits," and the report didn't consider the merits of Scheindlin's rulings.

"I think it's inappropriate to label any judge as liberal or conservative," Scheindlin said in the interview. "I like to think of myself as a fair-minded neutral who calls the case outcomes the way that the law and justice require."

Improved Atmosphere

Scheindlin said she thinks Americans' attitude toward civil liberties has changed since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

"I think it's better—I think the worst time was around 9/11. People just didn't want to hear about the rights of anybody when they felt their security was threatened—so I think, actually its been slowly better for the last decade as 9/11 has receded," she said. "One worries again, though, with the Boston Marathon bombers and whether public opinion shifts back, but I don't think anybody was particularly outraged [the surviving suspect] wasn't read Miranda rights.

"It's events like this that test people's commitments to civil liberties...I think the atmosphere has been much better because more of the population has been critical of what I might call the Bush-era policies—the torture memo, the Guantanamo issue, the military courts, the detention without charges."

She said she thinks that President Barack Obama would like to close the detention center at Guantanamo but cannot get Congress to go along.

"It's deeply troubling to hold people in perpetuity without charging them," Scheindlin said. "We like to think we don't do that."

Scheindlin said that politics influences the selection of federal judges, but that is mainly on the appellate court level.

"Let's be realistic, these are political appointments and the makeup of the circuit judges in this circuit is slowly changing now that President Obama has been here five years," she said.

<http://www.newyorklawjournal.com/PubArticleNY.jsp?id=1202600625151&slreturn=20131007151207>

But she said that the Southern District had been "extraordinarily lucky" in avoiding political polarization.

"I'm saying that it's not partisan, she said. "All through the Bush years, all through the Obama years we have had really high quality people. We are so lucky here we don't have political hacks. We have well-qualified judges virtually across the board."

Scheidlin said that she was disappointed in the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling last month on the Alien Tort Claims Act, Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum, 569 U.S. — (2013), determining that there was no extraterritorial application of the law.

In 2009, Scheindlin had recognized aiding and abetting liability for corporations on human rights violations in South Africa, the case along with Awadallah that has given her the greatest pride (NYLJ, April 9, 2009). But her ruling was put on hold while the Supreme Court considered the issue.

Scheidlin said Justice Samuel Alito "reached out" and skirted the aiding and abetting question just to strike down the law on extraterritoriality grounds, and "that was sad."

Scheidlin observed that new technologies had changed the law since she joined the bench, as evidenced by her own e-discovery rulings in Zubulake and other cases.

"This is what lawyers really talk about—social media, GPS, cell sites, data collection, technology-assisted review," she said. "The biggest change in the law is that all these issues that have arisen out of the new world we live in.

"Now, the civil side is very advanced, the criminal side is just beginning to catch up, but all data is electronic data, all discovery is e-discovery," she said.

And, like many judges, she worries about the impact of social media on juries.

In the case of arms trafficker Viktor Bout, she made the jury sign a "pledge" not to go on Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn or other outlets and promise they would not communicate that way, and if they did, "they understood they would be subjected to prosecution which was supposed to be an in terrorem effect," she said.

They signed, but one juror in the whole selection process said, "'I can't sign that' and I said 'Well, thank you for telling me, you're off,'" Scheindlin said. "It really is threatening to the jury system—the ease of obtaining evidence outside the courtroom. This has happened again and again."

Scheidlin has been married for almost 30 years to Stanley Friedman, the associate dean of education at SUNY Downstate Medical Center. She has two grown children.

She admits to having virtually no outside interests.

"I love to work," she said. "The only other way I know how to enjoy myself is exercise. Otherwise, I'm a great reader. I love audio books."

<http://www.newyorklawjournal.com/PubArticleNY.jsp?id=1202600625151&slreturn=20131007151207>

She said she's at the courthouse most days from 10 a.m to 8 p.m., "really living here." She also works all weekend and requires her clerks to work one weekend day.

"This is sort of my home away from home," she said.

NY 'Frisk' Judge Calls Criticism 'Below-The-Belt'

Larry Neumeister

May. 19, 2013 2:43 PM EDT

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal judge presiding over civil rights challenges to the stop-and-frisk practices of the New York Police Department has no doubt where she stands with the government.

"I know I'm not their favorite judge," U.S. District Judge Shira A. Scheindlin said during an Associated Press interview Friday. It was another moment of candor for a judge known for her call-it-as-she-sees-it manner and willingness to confront government lawyers in a courthouse where many judges — former federal prosecutors themselves — seem less inclined.

"I do think that I treat the government as only one more litigant," she said during the interview that proceeded with a single rule: no questions about the trial over police tactics that reaches closing arguments Monday.

The trial has put the NYPD and City Hall on the defensive as they justify a long-running policy of stopping, questioning and frisking some residents to deter crime. Critics say it discriminates against blacks and Hispanics. Scheindlin is not being asked to ban the tactic, since it has been found to be legal, but she does have the power to order reforms in how it is implemented.

During the trial, she's shown an impatience with lawyers on both sides when they stray from the topic at hand, and a willingness to directly question witnesses — including police supervisors — about the nuts and bolts of trying to keep streets safe.

"I don't think they're entitled to deference," she said of government attorneys. "I think some of the judges are a little more timid to maybe disagree with the U.S. attorney's office. ... They have to prove their case like anybody else. I don't give them special respect. Maybe some judges do because they came from the office, they know the people there, whatever. I try not to do that."

Scheindlin, 66, appointed by President Bill Clinton, has had plenty of high-profile cases in 19 years in federal court, including three trials of John "Junior" Gotti, the son of the late legendary mob boss John Gotti, two trials of a California student who knew two of the Sept. 11 hijackers and the trial of international arms dealer Viktor Bout.

The AP interview came after a New York Daily News article revealed that the staff of Mayor Michael Bloomberg had reviewed her record to show that 60 percent of her 15 written "search-and-seizure" rulings since she took the bench in 1994 had gone against law enforcement.

The judge called it a "below-the-belt attack" on judicial independence. She said it was rare when any judge grants a request to suppress evidence in a law enforcement case and that inclusion of the numerous times when she rejected the requests with oral rulings from the bench would likely reduce the total to less than 5 percent.

She said reports that the mayor's office was behind the study made it worse.

"If that's true, that's quite disgraceful," Scheindlin said. "It was very discouraging and upsetting. I can't say it has no toll."

Of such criticism, she said: "It's very painful. Judges can't really easily defend themselves. ... To attack the judge personally is completely inappropriate and intimidates judges or it is intended to intimidate judges or it has an effect on other judges and that worries me."

A Bloomberg spokesman said Saturday, "We did a simple search of publicly available written decisions, as the media is also free to do."

The New York County Lawyers' Association called the report meaningless because it sampled so few Scheindlin rulings.

Scheindlin has faced heat before, most notably a decade ago when she presided over the trials of Osama Awadallah and one newspaper labeled her "Osama's best friend," a reference that some could misinterpret to refer to Osama bin Laden.

"You could be in danger, physically," she said.

The Awadallah case is memorable to Scheindlin for how it reflected the mood of the attitude across the country after the Sept. 11 attacks. Awadallah, born in Venezuela and raised in Jordan, was a young immigrant in San Diego who was picked up as a material witness after his telephone number was found in a car that one of the hijackers drove to the airport on Sept. 11. Prosecutors agreed he was no terrorist but claimed he intentionally misled grand jurors about how well he knew one of the terrorists. Defense attorneys said he was left confused after 20 days in detention.

She said she learned in talking to jurors after Awadallah's first trial that they came within one vote of convicting him of false statements. At the next trial, he was exonerated.

"Same evidence. Same prosecutor. Same defense lawyers. Jury goes from 11-to-1 to 12-zip," she recalled. "So I asked what happened. The answer is the country had turned in a new direction."

She said immediately after Sept. 11, "people were so worried and so terrified that the next attack was around the corner that they were willing to cede many of their civil liberties."

<http://bigstory.ap.org/article/ny-frisk-judge-calls-criticism-below-belt>

She added: "The second half of the (President George W.) Bush term, Bush policies were not popular any longer. People were much more distant from the event of 9/11. Now they were more concerned with civil liberties and less concerned with the security threat. ... I thought it was dramatically shown by what happened in that case."

In choosing law clerks, Scheindlin looks for varied experience like her own. She has been a prosecutor and a defense lawyer and was once politically active.

"I don't want a kid who's just done seven straight years of A's at Harvard," she said. "I want to know that they've done something, worked somewhere. Some experience. Some work. Some life. That makes for a rounded person."

And should they someday become a judge, it makes them well prepared for the rare case of impact.

"That's the day you live for, to do something that you believe is right and that is upheld as right and has a national impact, that's great," Scheindlin said. "That's why people want to be judges, I think, so they can make a difference."

Associated Press writers Tom Hays and Colleen Long contributed to this report.
